Chinese Bandits Slay U. S. Sailor at Yochow

BRITISH GUNBOATS ALSO FIRED UPON AND TWO WOUNDED

American Commander Silences Attackers With 3-Inch Guns and Machine Gun Fire.

STATE DEPARTMENT HAS SENT PROTESTS

Missionaries Reported Driven Through Streets at Suiping by Chinese Armed With Sticks.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—(P)—Difficulties with revolution-torn China, already climaxed by a state department protest, were augmented today by a radio report to the navy department that an American blue-jacket had been killed in a battle with bandits.

The seaman was Samuel Elkins, of Brooklyn, N. Y., attached to the United States gunboat Guam. He was struck by a bandit rifle ball during a short encounter at Yochow, Hunan, China, when brigands turned from looting the city to fire upon the ship.

A news report from Shanghai said three British gunboats had been fired upon at the same time, and two sailors wounded before the British and American seamen silenced the bandit riflemen.

A report of the encounter went to Secretary Adams by Rear Admiral Charles B. McVay, commander-in-chief of the Asiatic fleet, said:

"U. S. ship Guam reports she was heavily fired upon by communists at about 1 p. m. July 4, while conveying the Neiping past Yochow. Fire was silenced by 26 rounds three-inch and 1,200 rounds machine guns.

"Seaman First Class Samuel Elkins was killed by rifle bullet.

"No sign of foreigners Yochow."

The next of kin of Elkins was listed by the navy as Mrs. Rose Teitelbaum, his grandmother, of 2845 West 36th street, Coney Island.

Two days ago the state department instructed the American, against the protesting of the navy, because of the alleged mistreatment of American citizens in China.

This action followed a report from Frank P. Lockhart, consul-general at Hankow, that he had received reliable advice that American missionaries at Suiping, Hunan, China, had been driven through the street with sticks.

State department officials said today no reply had been received from the navy, and they probably would not for at least a week. Instructions had been to deliver one protest to the highest military authorities now in control of Suiping, but because of difficulties of communication officials said the protest could not be delivered for some time.

Lockhart's report to the department said the Rev. Thomas L. Lee, of Minneapolis, and Deaconess Thelma Sandland, Gray, Minn., had been paraded through the streets of Suiping and roughly handled by a local political organization.

Late last month a treaty of arbitration between the United States and the republic of China was signed by Secretary Stimson and the Chinese minister in Washington. But even if the treaty had been ratified and placed in effect by the two governments it was not known today whether it would apply to the situations now causing international difficulties in China.

Information regarding another encounter between the British ship Teal and a band of communists was also transmitted to the navy today by Admiral McVay. His message said one man had been seriously wounded in an engagement at Cheng Ling on the Yangtze river.

BANDITS SLAY MANT IN HUNAN.

SHANGHAI, July 5.—(P)—Bandits, vultures of China's civil war, today swooped upon Hunan province in the wake of fleeing rebel armies.

Emboldened by their success yesterday in sacking Yochow with masses of hundreds, outlaws fired upon American and British gunboats and plundered numerous Yangtze valley towns.

Samuel Elkins of Brooklyn, seaman on the American gunboat Guam was killed, and two British sailors were wounded before the return fire of the Guam and three British gunboats routed brigand riflemen.

LEN G. BROUGHTON RESIGNATION SEEN

Pastor of Baptist Tabernacle Reported Planning Evangelistic Work.

Following reports that he would tender his resignation as pastor of the church he founded more than 30 years ago, Dr. Len G. Broughton Saturday night said that whatever he had to say about the matter would be known some time today.

Reports that he would surrender the pastorate today indicated that he would go into the evangelistic field. Dr. Broughton came back to Atlanta last September from Jacksonville, Fla., having previously served pulpits in Richmond, Va.; Knoxville, Tenn., and London, England.

After serving fifteen years in Atlanta, Dr. Broughton, a native of and member of a well-known North Carolina family of ministers and educators, went to other fields, including Christ church in London, and for nearly four years was away from Atlanta.

Last September he returned and his sermons since then have attracted widespread attention.

Dr. Broughton succeeded, nine months ago, the Rev. W. H. Houghton. His return to his old pastorate was warmly welcomed by the congregation, especially by the older members, who recalled the first fifteen years after the church had been established as a result of a movement he initiated.

Blue Ribbon Bull Fails in Attempt To Swim Ocean

NEW YORK, July 5.—(P)—Ten thousand dollars worth of blue ribbon bull went swimming in New York harbor today, outdistanced police boats which gave him up for lost and finally swam ashore in Brooklyn where he was captured by swimmers and tied up to a post as meek, by that time, as an ordinary old milk cow.

Answering to the name of Alphonse, or maybe he doesn't, the bull was en route to Brooklyn from Staten Island on the first lap of an ocean trip to Germany when he decided to go swimming.

The mate on the ferry aboard which he was making the trip tried to argue it out with him but after a couple of laps around the deck, with the bull gaining on the straightaway and the mate picking up headway on the corners, Alphonse fell down and went splash.

Came the pursuit, first one police launch, then two, then three, then four, and a couple of tugs.

Puzzled policemen scratched their heads, tried maneuvering Alphonse toward shore, tried to lass him, tried everything they could think of. Alphonse became bored, really settled down to swimming and they lost sight of him.

Imagine the surprise of swimmers in Gravesend bay an hour or so later when Alphonse arrived, panting, in their midst. Being resourceful they secured some rope from a beached boat, lassoed him, tied him to a post and called the police, to which Alphonse gave meek acquiescence. He was tired of swimming.

Alphonse, the best Holstein bull in Pennsylvania, is to be shipped to Germany for exhibition at fairs there.

Free Trade in Empire, High Duties on All Imports Is Plan of Powerful Group.

LONDON, July 5.—(P)—A resolution adopted Thursday by a committee of the most powerful bankers in the country urging free trade among the component parts of the empire with a tariff on all goods imported from foreign countries, became today a political sensation.

Among those voting for the resolution was Reginald McKenna, former liberal chancellor of the exchequer and chairman of the Midland bank. His conversion from traditional free trade supporter to protectionist is still regarded as a seventh wonder in the British political world.

The bankers' resolution says: "Urgent measures for the promotion of inter-imperial trade are needed to secure and extend the market for British products both at home and abroad." Among the signers are the Bank of England and five other great British banks.

Commander J. M. Kenworthy, labor member of the house of commons, said he believed the bankers' frank expression of their views would "help the laborite policy of inter-imperial trade by bulk purchase, import boards and direct exchange of commodities."

The proposals for a protective tariff, Commander Kenworthy dismissed as showing "simply that even the hard-headed bankers have become frightened for the time being." The labor member expressed hope that the bankers would soon "recover their sanity."

Sir Lambert Ward, conservative member of the house of commons, said that practically none of the bankers had ever fought an election in an industrial constituency. Therefore they did not realize the appalling prejudice against protection in many parts of the country. The mere whisper of food taxes had sent the conservatives thousands of votes in the past and might easily do so in the future.

In speaking thus Sir Lambert is believed to have expressed the view held by the Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin, conservative leader.

While these opinions were being expressed in interviews R. H. Tennant, chairman of the Westminster bank, who was one of the signatories of the resolution, remarked that the conference represented the highest of banking opinion, and added, largely in recognition of comments:

"We all want empire free trade, and while we bankers are not politicians, we have seen fit to discuss and declare our views."

2 KILLED, 3 HURT AT GRADE CROSSING

G. T. Woodall, of Columbus, and 4-Month-Old Child Die in Wreck.

MACON, Ga., July 5.—(P)—G. T. Woodall, of Columbus, Ga., was killed almost instantly and his wife and three children were badly hurt tonight when an automobile in which they were riding collided with a Central of Georgia train at the Elm street crossing.

When the ambulance picking up the injured reached the hospital a 4-month-old baby of the Woodalls was found to be dead.

Identification of the victims was established by a brother, P. F. Woodall.

G. T. Woodall and his family had been visiting the family of W. P. Hough, on South College street, over the Fourth of July holidays, and left shortly after dark tonight for their home in Columbus.

They took a short cut from Mercer University to the highway leading to Columbus, using Elm street, where there is a dangerous grade crossing. Whether the freight train struck the automobile or vice versa had not been established.

Mrs. Woodall will recover, doctors at a hospital stated, but two children are in a serious condition.

Woodall's neck was broken. The four-month-old child was crushed. Bonnie Woodall, three years old, sustained an injury to her head. G. T. Woodall, five years old, has a broken leg.

Mrs. G. T. Woodall escaped with lacerations of the face and possible internal injuries.

NIAGARA'S RAPIDS PLUNGE BARREL RIDER TO DEATH

Buffalo Chef's Body Is Lost in Cataracts—Veteran Riverman Predicted Death.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., July 5.—(P)—Niagara's thundering horseshoe cataract ended another dream of fame and fortune in causing the death late today of George L. Stathakis, 46, Buffalo chef, who attempted to ride through the maelstrom in a barrel of his own construction. Thousands saw the barge of wood and steel plunge over the cataract. Not a vestige of the barrel or a trace of the man's body was found.

William (Red) Hill, veteran riverman of Niagara Falls, Ontario, engaged by Stathakis to haul him out after the trip, gave up hope of finding the Buffalo man alive.

Hill had predicted the trip would bring death to Stathakis. So sure was he that the man would not live to tell of his trip that he had George Morse, Canadian undertaker, on hand to care for the body. Hill also had two physicians on the lower river bank in case Stathakis were picked up alive, but injured.

Success Discounted.

Before the start, Hill told Stathakis he did not believe the barrel would withstand the terrific buffeting to which it would be subjected.

Stathakis was placed in the barrel off Navy Island. Leo and John Mang, rivermen and brothers, superintended the towing of the barrel out to the island and the placing of the man in the craft. The heavy steel lid was placed on the small opening and screwed down with 16 bolts.

The huge cask rode well, the strong current driving it rapidly. It was seen to bounce high and then to be almost submerged by the heavy waves. As it neared the falls' brink it just missed an old submarine chaser, manning the rocks. Spectators lined the banks of the river about Terrapin Point, Goat Island, on the American side, and Table Rock on the Canadian side, gaped as they saw the barrel swing in toward the steel frame of the old chaser.

Search for Barrel.

A diverting current caught the barrel and carried it away from the marooned boat and it sped on toward the falls' brink. It passed over the crest at a point very high and some believed it had hit a rock as it rose high in the air, altered for an instant and then fell straight down into the mist and tumbling water.

"Stathakis' barrel broke up," Hill said as he came in from his vigil. "I know from the start that he would never make it. The end is caught back there in the rocks and surely is a mass of ruins."

After Stathakis took the fatal plunge the steamer Maid of the Mist made two trips to the foot of the falls. The crew reported that they kept close watch for signs of the barrel, but could see nothing of it or any of the fragments.

Stathakis had said he was the author of "The Mysterious Veil of Humanity Through the Ages," and he wanted to know the sensations of the mind as he made the perilous trip to record them in another book as much as he did the chance to reap the monetary harvest he believed awaited a successful conclusion of the stunt.

Stathakis' barrel was the heaviest craft in which any seeker after fame and fortune has yet attempted to make the plunge over Niagara Falls. It weighed about a ton, was 10 feet long and almost 5 feet in diameter. It was constructed of oak staves, four inches thick, held in place by heavy hoops of steel. At each end were strong steel projections. Inside the barrel was a steel casing.

The interior was well padded and Stathakis was strapped to a spring mattress for the plunge. A steel plate, fastened with 16 bolts closed the opening through which he entered the barrel. The strange craft was fitted with air chambers.

22-YEAR GIRL WINS BRITISH AIR RACE

All England Thrilled as Girl Defeats 87 in Famous Race.

LONDON, July 5.—(P)—Winifred Brown, a 22-year-old girl, today thrilled all England by winning the king's cup air race against scores of noted pilots, thus seating herself on the pedestal occupied by the 23-year-old English girl who recently flew from England to Australia.

Victor over 87 others around a 750-mile course, she was hailed tonight as a fit companion for Amy Johnson, the England to Australia solo flier. And she is in addition the first woman to win Great Britain's most important air race.

A husband and wife, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Butler, took second and fourth places, respectively. Flight Lieutenant H. R. D. Waghorn, who last year won the Schneider cup event, was third.

Miss Brown, flying an avro-vanion Moth, averaged 102.7 miles an hour. She started fourteenth from the Hanworth park airfield, Farnham, under the system of handicapping used and gradually overhauled her rivals.

She was perfectly cool and not unduly tired on landing, although her face was black with grease.

"My machine behaved wonderfully," she commented. "All I had to do was sit in it."

Other women competing were Lady Buller, Miss D. C. Guest and Mrs. C. M. Young.

The Prince of Wales had an entry, a hawk, Tom Tit piloted by Squadron leader D. S. Don and his brother, Prince George, entered a Hawk-Moth, handled by Flight Lieutenant E. H. Fielden. Prince George's plane took seventh place and his elder brother's eighteenth. Neither prince was in the race personally.

The 88 planes flew by way of Bristol, Manchester, New Castle and back to Hanworth. A number of machines were forced to descend because of engine trouble and other causes, one or two of the pilots receiving minor injuries, however, from fire cracks.

Deaths were divided as follows: Fireworks, 14; traffic, 107; drownings, 63; airplanes, 7; miscellaneous, 14.

The statistics showed a general desire "to get out of town." Major cities reported a relatively small number of fatalities while suburbs and rural sections—where motorists flocked—were the scenes of many fatal accidents.

With Recovered Bills, Scorched in Fire, Evans Opens Another Store a Few Hours After Blaze.

As the result of his attempt to start a fire in a small gasoline stove in his home Saturday, Charles E. Evans, a grocer, who lives at 730 Bankhead avenue and who operates a small grocery at the same address, was severely burned about the hands and face, and his sister-in-law, ill in the home at the time, was carried to a hospital, as was Mrs. Evans, who fainted during the height of the blaze.

Both the residence and grocery stock of Evans were destroyed, the damage being estimated at $2,500. The grocer, having aroused members of the household and seeing them safely out, rushed back into the burning structure and saved approximately $600 in currency which he kept in a chiffonier drawer. It was this act that caused him to suffer burns, and during his brief time in the flaming house his wife fainted. She was carried to West Side hospital, nearby, as was her sister, Mrs. Carlton Benson, confined to bed with typhoid fever.

Mr. Evans told police he was attempting to prime the gasoline stove, using a five-gallon container of gasoline, which became ignited and which exploded, spraying the kitchen with flames, which rapidly spread to other parts of the house and store. He awakened all members of the family and rushed them to safety, after which he remembered his savings in the chiffonier drawer. He saturated his hair, face and arms in water and went into the burning dwelling, where he secured the $600, which was badly scorched.

Rivers Speaks.

Former State Senator E. R. Rivers continued his active speaking campaign with a talk at Shelman in which he especially outlined the ways in which it was legally possible for the state to come to the aid of the farmers.

Announcement was made from the Atlanta headquarters of Carwell that he would from now until the date of the primary carry the fight direct to the people, covering the fire state with speaking engagements between now and the date of the primary. Judge R. N. Hardeman, his campaign manager, declared it was hoped the gubernatorial candidate could visit every county in the state. Since there are 161 counties in Georgia and only 65 days before the primary, this program would mean one of the most intensive campaigns in the history of Georgia politics.

Hewlett A. Hall, campaign manager for former Governor John M. Slaton, who is seeking the seat in the United States senate now held by William J. Harris, gave out a statement Saturday in which he declared "the interest in the senatorial campaign is demonstrated by the

Fireworks Cause Only 7 Per Cent Of 4th Deaths

BY UNITED PRESS.

Traffic mishaps accounted for approximately half of the more than 200 deaths that occurred in the nation from Fourth of July accidents.

A United News survey showed that efforts to have a "safe and sane Fourth" had reduced considerably the fatalities from fireworks. Fourteen persons lost their lives as a result of celebrating with fireworks, while the traffic deaths amounted to 107. About 1,200 persons suffered minor injuries, however, from fire cracks.

Deaths were divided as follows: Fireworks, 14; traffic, 107; drownings, 63; airplanes, 7; miscellaneous, 14.

The statistics showed a general desire "to get out of town." Major cities reported a relatively small number of fatalities while suburbs and rural sections—where motorists flocked—were the scenes of many fatal accidents.

INTEREST SLUMPS IN STATE POLITICS

Week-End Quiet After Speaking Engagements on Fourth of July.

State politics suffered a decided slump Saturday from the high water mark of Friday, when perfunctory was the order of the day in the various celebrations of the Fourth of July.

From Washington Senator Harris issued another statement saying that his friends had written him it "useless to waste time and effort in organizing a campaign, and that Mr. Slaton cannot buy the voters of their county or the senatorship in Georgia." He added that the senate would be in session for some days, and he would remain at his post of duty as usual.

Only one of the state-wide candidates replied to charges made by opponents during Friday's outburst of attacks and counter charges. James A. Perry, chairman of the public utilities commission and candidate for governor, lost no time in replying spiritedly to remarks made at Bainbridge by Secretary of State George H. Carwell, who also is seeking the gubernatorial nomination.

"Mr. Carwell's statement that I was aiding and abetting Senator E. R. Rivers in leading the fight in the senate to keep Mr. Holder in office, is willfully false," declared Mr. Perry, "and his criticism of the administration of the motor bus law is willfully deceptive."

BOARD'S APPROVAL WOULD BAR MOVE TO OUST DOCTOR

Application, Filed Saturday, Will Be Considered By Pension Committee Monday Morning.

PHYSICIAN FACES TWO INDICTMENTS

One True Bill Charges Extortion and the Other Violation of the Narcotic Statutes.

Dr. John G. Wilkins, city physician, under indictment in Fulton county and the federal district courts, will quit his post at once if the board of pensions grants an application on which it is scheduled to act Monday morning.

Application for the pension was on file Saturday with B. Graham West, city comptroller, one of the three members of the pension committee.

Mr. West declared that he, Mayor I. N. Ragdale and Henry B. Kennedy, city treasurer, composing the pension board, have the petition before them, and will be ready to submit a report to the council meeting Monday afternoon, when many matters of importance are slated for consideration.

Dr. Wilkins, named in many counts in one indictment charging him with extortion, has been connected with the city for 27 years and under the law is entitled to retire on pension.

He also is under indictment in the federal district court charged with violation of the narcotic laws.

If the pension board approves Dr. Wilkins' petition and it is sanctioned by council, Dr. Wilkins automatically would be out of his post and the announced effort of Alderman G. Everett Millican, of the tenth ward, and others to suspend him pending outcome of the trial of his cases could not be considered.

In addition to settlement of the status of Dr. Wilkins, council Monday probably will face one of its most turbulent sessions of a stormy year.

Included in the long list of matters slated for consideration are the following:

1. Proposal of Alderman G. Everett Millican, of the tenth ward, that in lieu of accepting the resignation of Alderman J. E. Turner, of the second ward, convicted of bribery, a committee looking toward impeachment be established.

2. Proposal of Councilman Joseph E. Berman, of the fourth ward, that a committee of five be formed to probe recent 50 per cent increase in price of ice in Atlanta with a view of ascertaining whether an illegal combine existed.

DeKalb Commissioner Plan Special Election Ruled Out

Act of 1927 Legislative Is Held Unconstitutional in Ruling by Judge John B. Hutcheson.

Judge John B. Hutcheson, in Stone Mountain circuit court, Saturday held unconstitutional an act of the legislature which would have permitted a special election to decide whether DeKalb county shall have a one-commissioner or a five-commissioner and county manager form of government. More than 3,000 registered voters of DeKalb county, proponents of the five-commissioner plan, had signed a petition asking that the special election be held.

The special election, which was to have been held Wednesday, was prohibited by the court in an injunction directed against Ordinary V. S. Morgan which held that the act of 1927, of which John Wesley Weekes, Decatur attorney, was the author, was in effect an amendment to the law of 1922—a general state law providing for the manner of changing county governments—and therefore was invalid.

Petitioners favoring the five-commissioner form thus were faced with the alternative of appealing to the state supreme court for a review of Judge Hutcheson's ruling or of promulgating a new petition based on the general law of 1922 instead of an appeal. The subsequent amendment of 1927, the court having rendered its decision on the ground that the 1927 act was passed solely for the benefit of DeKalb county by virtue of its phrasing respecting population.

While leaders of the faction seeking a special election would not indicate Saturday just what course would be taken, it was the general opinion that a new petition would be circulated based on the general law of 1922. In this event, opponents pointed out, however, it would be necessary for three-fourths of the registered voters to sign such an appeal instead of the mere majority provided for by the amendment of 1927, held void by the court.

Under the 1922 act, it was set forth, a county, by three-fourths vote of its registered citizens, may adopt either an ordinary form of government, a one-, three- or five-commissioner form. To effect a change, however, a constitutional majority is necessary, and opponents of the proposed change in DeKalb expressed themselves as confident such a majority was improbable.

Judge Hutcheson's ruling was as follows: R. T. Sills et al. vs. V. S. Morgan, ordinary DeKalb county, in DeKalb superior court, petition for injunction, September term, 1930.

It is the act of 1922, Page 82, a law of a general nature having uniform operation throughout the state, which provides that "the act shall be a general law for all counties in this state as to government composed of the board of county commissioners of roads and revenues for such county, with a county manager as the chief executive officer thereof, etc. It further provides that this act shall not prevent any county from having a county commissioner form of government by local act, provided such local act does not provide a county manager. It further provides that county of the state except upon a majority vote of the qualified voters of the county, and that the operation of this act in any county adopting the same shall be suspended in like manner as a majority vote, local act previously in force is automatically revived.

A study of Section 24 will show that any county in Georgia, upon proper procedure, can call for an election upon this uniform county manager law. If it is a county manager or one commissioner it can put this law into effect upon proper procedure. If it is a county in which the ordinary is the political power of the county, it can cause the act to be repealed by a local act. There is no county in the state under any conceivable form of county government which cannot invoke the operation of this act. This is practically conceded by counsel on both sides of the controversy.

The question then arises as to whether the act of 1927 is in the sense of the constitutional provision in Section 63(1) of the constitution a special law. The act of 1927 is a special law in the sense that it provides for a special election to decide whether DeKalb county shall have a one-commissioner or a five-commissioner and county manager form of government. The act of 1927 is a special law in the sense that it provides for a special election to decide whether DeKalb county shall have a one-commissioner or a five-commissioner and county manager form of government. The act of 1927 is a special law in the sense that it provides for a special election to decide whether DeKalb county shall have a one-commissioner or a five-commissioner and county manager form of government.

BRITTEN ASKS ADAMS TO KEEP DOCKS BUSY

WASHINGTON, July 5.—(AP)—In an effort to prevent disruption of the navy's highly skilled battleship modernization crews and the leaving of men, Chairman Britten, of the house naval affairs committee, has initiated steps to obtain assurance for Secretary Adams that financial provision will be made next December for completing the battleship modernization program.

Recalling instances of similar action at other sessions, the chairman has offered the secretary his assistance in placing the matter before appropriations committee to insure inclusion of a $300,000 allotment in the first deficiency appropriation bill at the next session of congress.

With assurance that funds will be provided, the secretary, in Britten's opinion, could begin the work that would have been authorized under the Darrow bill which the chairman had held during the World War. He

Wets Described As Defenders Of Constitution

PHILADELPHIA, July 4.—(AP)—An attack on the eighteenth amendment was made today by Mayor Harry A. Mackey in addressing a great crowd in Independence square at Philadelphia's official celebration of Independence Day.

Standing in the shadows of historic Independence hall, Mayor Mackey said that those who contend the eighteenth amendment "was a great mistake in fundamental government," were the choicest defenders of the constitution.

"For it is they," he added, "who seek to defend the constitution against ruthless mutilation by an amendment that regulates private conduct than addressing itself to the great principle of fundamental government."

"I plead for a return to the states of the right of local option. There is no constitutional prohibition against the congress leaving the enforcement of prohibition to the states."

The mayor said that if by the warring of a lance or the snapping of a finger all strong drink could be removed from the face of the earth he would heartily approve. He promised all the police power of the state to enforce the law but he said enforcement was "practically impossible."

Miami Lists 5,718 Persons Unemployed

MIAMI, Fla., July 5.—(AP)—Miami had an unemployment percentage of 5.1 as of April 1 for its 1930 population of 110,514, according to figures released here today by Hugh G. Williams, census supervisor. The magic city had 5,718 persons who listed themselves as out of work, able to work and seeking work.

Dade county, with 142,620 population, had 6,536 persons unemployed, a percentage of 4.5 as of the April 1 date. Miami Beach, playground for many of America's wealthy, had but 1.6 per cent of its 6,401 persons unemployed, while Coral Gables, another Miami suburb, had 108 unemployed out of its 5,862 population, a percentage of 1.8.

Palm Beach, another winter playground, listed a similar unemployment percentage to that of Coral Gables, with 31 persons unemployed out of the 1,673 population. West Palm Beach, with 21,328 population, had 8.2 per cent unemployed, or 1,765, while Palm Beach county, with 51,776 population, had 2,635 or 5.1 per cent unemployed. Lake Worth's unemployment percentage was 3.4, or 61 per cent of its 5,888 population.

Diphtheria Deaths Drop 95 Per Cent

NEW YORK, July 5.—(AP)—The revised report of the joint committee on health problems of the American Medical Association and the National Educational Association, made public today, said that the death rate of diphtheria has been cut in half since 1900. In the case of some diseases, notably diphtheria, it has been reduced 95 per cent.

The report hailed the diphtheria death rate reduction as one of the most striking victories recorded in the history of medicine in the past 50 years. This victory was principally due to the discovery of diphtheria antitoxin and toxin-antitoxin used to immunize children, it said.

The report disclosed that the reduction in diphtheria was equalled by that for typhoid and paratyphoid. The report estimated that American taxpayers pay more than $27,000,000 yearly to care for sufferers from tuberculosis and heart disease, and to assist those otherwise physically handicapped.

550 Fight Forest Fire for Six Days

LARAMIE, Wyo., July 5.—(AP)—In the sixth day of their struggle, 550 fire fighters today continued their efforts to check a forest fire that has burned over some 3,500 acres of rich timber land in the French creek territory of the Medicine Bow National forest.

Forest Supervisor H. C. Hilton reported his fighting force had succeeded in establishing an eight-mile control line around the blaze, leaving only a gap of about a mile and a half which it was hoped could be closed.

Gas Company May Be Indicted For Not Reporting on Still

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 5.—(NANA)—Are readers of gas and water meters to be informed for the government because of will they be elevated to the confidential class of doctors and lawyers, secreting in their benighted bosoms the unlawful spectacles they behold betwixt the basement steps and the cobwebby meter?

The meter reader obliged to report clues as well as leaks, the inscription on basement bottles as well as the reading on the meter dial? These important questions may be discussed by corporation lawyers if the Kansas City Gas Company is indicted as a "manufacturer of liquor," a charge based on the government's allegation that gas company employees must have seen an 800-gallon still recently seized in the basement of a purported garage at 1414 Independence avenue. The gas meter was just behind the still, which the government holds, had been in operation three months.

In Plain View.

At least two gas meter readers and one water meter reader must have seen the still on their way to the meter. The still was connected directly with the meter.

With assurance that funds will be provided, the secretary, in Britten's opinion, could begin the work that would have been authorized under the Darrow bill which the chairman had held during the World War. He

Major T. J. Strickler, vice president and general manager of the Kansas City Gas Company, was amazed when informed late today of the government's intention to indict.

"I know nothing of the whole matter," he declared. "A still never was reported to me. Perhaps the garage's bill was $135 in May, as the district attorney says, but many such places have large bills. I can't say anything more now."

A charge of failure to report a felony to the authorities could be filed against the meter readers themselves but the government is after the "big fellows."

The water meter readers are as culpable as the gas house boys if they saw the still. As a matter of fact, they couldn't miss it. The electric meter readers are the only ones with an alibi. The still was not visible from the meter they read.

Mr. Vandeventer promised to investigate the city water department to learn whether a water meter reader had visited the place since the still was put in operation. The city, however, is not virtuously liable. It is exempt by virtue of being a municipal corporation.

Judge H. F. McElroy, city manager, who ultimately is responsible for the water department, jumped immediately to the defense of his meter readers.

"If the government is trying to stick a meter reader," he said, "I myself will take the fall. I understand the prohibition people have developed big-heartedness, however, and are after the major offenders. I'm glad of it."

To Disguise Meter Boys. "I mean to handle the matter this day. I shall dress my meter readers up in checked golf suits and give each of them a calabash pipe, bloodhound and a tin star. Then they will be snoopers as well as meter readers. In case householders become frightened of meter readers and refuse to admit them to their basements, artificial mustaches will be provided. I shall order a gross of Charlie Chaplin mustaches immediately to disguise my meter readers.

"Henceforth our meter readers have been impersonal in their duties. They never did violate the privilege of being admitted to the homes of our citizens. We will change that. We will consider every other beverage a competitive commodity. We are the only merchants of water hereabouts and we intend to see that people drink it."

"If our meter readers don't know what a still looks like, we will teach them. Perhaps we can start an object lesson class if we can get a good Tuesday."

MIAMI, Fla., July 5.—(AP)—Miami had an unemployment percentage of 5.1 as of April 1 for its 1930 population of 110,514, according to figures released here today by Hugh G. Dade county, with 142,620 population, had 6,536 persons unemployed, a percentage of 4.5 as of the April 1 date. Miami Beach, playground for many of America's wealthy, had but 1.6 per cent of its 6,401 persons unemployed, while Coral Gables, another Miami suburb, had 108 unemployed out of its 5,862 population, a percentage of 1.8.

Nine Escape Jail In Alabama Town

FORT PAYNE, Ala., July 5.—(AP)—Overpowering the night jailer in a corridor and throwing a shirt soaked in acid over his head, nine prisoners made a successful getaway from the DeKalb county jail shortly after 10 o'clock Friday night. The doors of the jail were left open today, not a single inmate having remained after the delivery.

Sheriff J. L. Campbell quickly organized a posse to search for the fugitives but so far none of them have been recaptured.

Three escaping were Frank Rogers, of Chattanooga, charged with transporting liquor; Bill and Austin Helms, Jimmy Rice and Calvin Hamilton, burglary; Hollis Smith, Doc Young, distilling; Alex Stevens, grand larceny; and John Windham, held on prohibition charges.

Night jailer Plunkett had gone up stairs on an errand and on his return was waylaid in a narrow corridor and the acid-soaked shirt thrown over his head. Taking his pistol and keys the prisoners then made their getaway. Plunkett received burns about the face which are not expected to prove serious.

Air passenger ticket sales in Chicago were three times greater than a year ago, he said.

BARKLEY OUTLINES
NEW TARIFF EFFECT

Says Farm Produce Price Is Still Dropping and End Not in Sight.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—(AP)—Senator Barkley, of Kentucky, said in statement through the democratic national committee today that if farm prices continue downward, the government "will be driven into the real estate business."

He characterized the prediction of the department of agriculture that the next seven years wheat prices would be lower than in the last seven "remarkable," "without warrant," and made at "a peculiarly inopportune time when grain and especially wheat is lower than it has been for nearly 20 years."

Barkley said the praise Secretary Hyde gave the tariff on the same day of the crop prediction was a "magic way of notifying the farmers of America that under this administration the worst is yet to come."

"If the prices of major farm commodities are destined to lower prices still, it is, indeed, a dark picture for the man who lives on a farm," he said, asserting that both wheat and cotton were selling below the cost of production.

"The federal farm loan system already owns $175,000,000 of real estate, the stock land banks own $15,000,000 worth of real estate."

ists to control the price of the commodity.

3. Another paper by Councilman John A. White, of the fourth, which would require ice peddlers to carry scales and to weigh each sale, giving full weight.

Ice Measure Under Fire.

4. Recommendation of the tax committee of council that the ice scoring ordinance, passed by council last December and which figured in the trial of former City Clerk Walter C. Taylor, be repealed, thus permitting the sale of ice in smaller quantities than the 25-pound score.

Under the ordinance the ice blocks were scored into 25-pound cubes and no sale was permitted in smaller quantities.

5. Another proposal by Councilman George Lyle, of the eleventh ward, that the board of trustees which formerly operated Grady hospital be re-established.

6. Revision of tax ordinances which would affect several businesses, although the proposal to tax aviation may be given an opportunity to appear before the tax committee of council before making the fees applicable.

Proposal by Councilman Lyle that operators of businesses be forced to obtain from R. W. Torres, engineer-secretary of the city planning commission, a certificate showing that the place for which the license is desired is zoned for business before the city clerk can issue such a license.

More Nurses Sought.

Alderman Millican also announced he would ask for half a dozen additional nurses for Battle Hill sanatorium, declaring that unless they are provided the institution will be unable to take any more bed patients at this time.

"Unless Dr. Wilkins quits his post as city physician or voluntarily asks or a leave of absence pending the trial of his case, I shall offer a paper putting him on the suspended list," Mr. Millican said in discussing the several-count indictment.

"I shall take the same position in Alderman Turner's case that I have taken in others, and will ask that a council committee be created to try him on the charges on which he was tried and convicted in the courts. If the committee finds that there is probable cause, I shall recommend that an impeachment proceeding be begun by council."

Former Alderman P. L. Moon will be named to succeed Dr. Turner.

Councilman Berman's measure provides in addition to the investigation that court action be instituted to protect citizens if it is found that an illegal combination is attempting to control the price of ice.

Councilman Lyle's proposal concerning operation of Grady has the support of Alderman Millican, who is chairman of the hospitals and charities committee and who has announced that he will favor any proposal which will "divorce Grady from politics."

Mr. Millican stated he favored such a plan when it was recommended by the Fulton county grand jury several

Bustling Activity at City Stockade and Farm Is Succeeded by Air of Silent Desolation

Usually the scene of bustling activity, a dead calm enveloped the city stockade and dairy farm Saturday. Less than 48 hours after Acting Mayor J. Allen Couch had by executive order liberated all city prisoners. When the above picture was taken Saturday afternoon only one white girl and three negro women prisoners were to be seen in the main building; (left), while seven male prisoners worked in the fields of the dairy farm nearby.

BY WILLIAM O. KEY, JR.

Silent and desolate in a white-hot sun that poured down upon it, the city stockade and dairy farm Saturday resembled a deserted village, with only a lone handful of prisoners leaning about the squat stone buildings, all as the result of Alderman J. Allen Couch's executive order releasing 273 inmates Thursday night.

One white girl, three negro women and seven male offenders constituted the guest list; and all about them was an air of detached loneliness. Room apparently was the outstanding commodity available at the prison, with plenty of stockade clothing lying in piles on the floor for future wearers.

The mountains of blue denim and heavy-soled shoes told a mute story of the joy with which the incarcerated men and women received the news of the acting-mayor's Fourth of July general amnesty.

People living some distance from the prison farm told of it, too. One woman living on the McDonough road near the Southern railway crossing, said that on the evening of the release of the prisoners shouts of glee were heard at her house, which is approximately a mile and a half from the stockade. The released inmates weeks ago in presentations concerning that institution.

Re-election of Joe C. Little, tax assessor, also to be brought to the floor of council, seemed assured Saturday. Mr. Little has held the post for eight years and is regarded as highly efficient. The terms is for four years.

Alderman Millican Saturday scored announcement of the garage committee of council that it will elect at 12:30 o'clock Monday a successor to Bruce Baxter, resigned, following entering a plea of guilty to a bribery complicity indictment.

Dr. Turner is chairman of the garage committee, and Mr. Millican holds that the committee should wait until Dr. Turner retires officially.

Dr. Russell H. Oppenheimer has declared that Emory University would take over the white unit of Grady and operate it as it now does the negro unit if council would control the finances.

Work on reconstruction of the negro unit is now under way under the direction of Emory, and the unit will be placed back into service following the fire about two weeks ago within the next few days, it was said Saturday.

A new elevator will be installed, new mattresses also have been bought and every effort will be made to make the unit more efficient than it was before the fire broke out.

Tax Ordinance.

Features of the tax ordinance will be before council for its consideration are a levy of $30 a year for antique dealers; $300 a year for finance corporations; and individuals making loans; $120 a year for Tom Thumb golf courses, and striking a provision from the tax ordinance which required building and loan companies to return stock of those companies at their market value as banks are required to do. Under the revised plan, the stockholders would pay the only tax on the stock.

Natatoriums or swimming pools will pay a license of $50 a year under the revised schedule; license of obstetrician sanitariums will be increased from $30 to $60 a year; dog peddlers will pay 500 annually; photograph and radio dealers will pay from $50 to $100 annually depending on the volume of business done; peddlers of football colors, etc., were given a reduction of from $12 a month to $8.

Mr. Lyle holds that many businesses are being operated in residential zones which are not zoned for businesses. His paper is designed to restrain illegal use of residential property.

Lou Kay Opposes Return to Mobile

MOBILE, Ala., July 5.—(AP)—A legal battle over the proposed return to Mobile of Lou Kay, indicted by the last county grand jury and now held under bond in Atlanta, Ga., was in progress today as the may opened a vigorous fight to prevent his extradition.

Kay was indicted by the June term of the grand jury on a charge of embezzlement, it being alleged that while he was in the employ of a sign company here he embezzled more than $130. He was taken into custody in Atlanta on a warrant.

Robert Holmes, city detective of Mobile, was in Atlanta Saturday armed with requisition papers seeking to return Kay to Mobile. When local authorities learned of the flight being staged by the indicted man, the police department instructed Detective Holmes to obtain legal aid if necessary in order to bring the man back here.

After he had been taken into custody Kay was freed under $500 bond on habeas corpus proceedings. He appealed to Governor L. G. Hardman, of Georgia, and a hearing has been set down for Monday.

Lou Kay, wanted in Mobile, Ala., was arrested by Atlanta police several days ago and held at police station pending advice from the Alabama police. He was released a few days later when he started a fight against extradition and a hearing was set for Monday, it was understood.

Official Immunity Plea Saves Texan

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 5.—(AP)—Congressman John C. Bean, of Knoxville, Texas, pleaded immunity to arrest and was en route home again today after being detained here on a charge of reckless driving.

He was arrested here by a deputy sheriff from a nearby county to whom a New York motorist had preferred charges against the congressman.

Box said he sideswiped the New Yorker's car about 30 miles from here yesterday. The two talked it over, the congressman said, "and I had no idea he would prefer charges."

Prison Population of 18.

In all, until shortly after noon Saturday, Atlanta's prison population totaled 18, counting the 11 at the dairy farm and the 7 incarcerated at the "iron house" on Hilliard street.

Two of the male prisoners at the farm Saturday were back on their familiar ground after being pardoned, having imbibed too freely of the flowing bowl during the national holiday, as a result of which they once more became a part of the official family of the city Saturday morning.

WHEAT BELT TO HEAR HYDE SOUND WARNING

Farm Board Officials To Relate Dangers of Overproduction.

KANSAS CITY, July 5.—(AP)—Describing his mission as being in the nature of a Paul Revere ride to warn southwestern wheat farmers of the dangers of overproduction and lack of organization, Secretary of Agriculture Hyde arrived here today.

With Chairman Alexander Legge, of the federal farm board, and department of agriculture officials he will make a swing through Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, west Texas and Oklahoma next week to address gatherings of wheat growers.

"We are not going to tell the farmer how to run his business," Secretary Hyde said. "By an accident of fate we are posted as sentries on the look-out towers to see what is coming. We would be derelict in our duty if we didn't warn the farmer. We are simply going to leave with the farmer the facts of the situation and let him use his own judgment."

U. S. Protests to France Liquor Flow From Islands

St. Pierre and Miquelon Are Newest Nests of Runners, Diplomatic Note Reveals.

BY RALPH HEANZEN, United News Staff Correspondent.

PARIS, July 5.—(AP)—A formal protest has been made by the United States government against the flow of liquor into the United States from the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, it was revealed today.

France, willing to please Washington, ordered the governor of the islands, J. H. E. Banch, to control the liquor traffic closely and prevent irregularities.

Since Canada tightened up its regulations governing the export of whiskey, the two tiny islands lying off the coast of Newfoundland have become the chief center of the liquor supply of the United States, as far as imports are concerned.

The American protest was kept a close secret until the ministry of colonies confirmed it today. The ministry makes no effort to deny that the islands, once nothing but barren rock and the poorest of the French colonies, have come into great wealth and assumed real importance since

Canada undertook to help the United States curb liquor runners. Shiploads of 25,000 cases of liquor and wines leave French ports every week, destined for St. Pierre—a perfectly legal procedure. The liquor is delivered to commission men at St. Pierre, who clear it from the islands for some destination other than the United States, and then transfer it to an armada of small, fast, armed motor cruisers, which are equipped with wireless and usually make a safe and rapid journey to the Maine coast.

"When Canada closed her borders," a spokesman of the ministry of commerce said today, "there was a noticeable increase in the liquor traffic to St. Pierre. The French government knew that unusually heavy deliveries had been made to Maine, and since everything was legal on the surface there was no means of preventing it."

The protest of the United States asked France to curb the traffic. We studied the problem and decided to ask the governor to survey the situation and prevent anything irregular from taking place.

The American instructions to the governor were repeated today with the insistence that ships clearing from the islands possess regular papers. The governor was instructed definitely not to favor, but to oppose, fraud. Naturally, France is anxious to give Washington satisfaction.

There was an unofficial suggestion from French sources that Washington should do more in the situation than merely lodge a protest. It was argued that the islands, once a poverty-stricken base for fishermen, had become rich and made one of France's most interesting colonies, being one of the few entirely populated by white people.

The French argument unofficially was that the islands were unlikely to abandon such a lucrative gold mine as liquor smuggling unless compensated in such form as by being given special fishing privileges in United States waters. It was hinted that a definite proposal by the United States offering something in return for drying up the islands would be acceptable.

The two tiny islands, which have an area of only 63 square miles and a population of less than 5,000 except in the fishing season, were retained by France under the treaty of Paris in 1763, by which France gave up all other territory in North America. The islands serve as stations for fishermen from Normandy and Brittany, who have the privileges of what is known as the "French coast" of Newfoundland, a stretch of about 200 miles between Cape Race and Cape St. John.

POPE'S BAN ON POLITICS
OFFICIALLY REITERATEDPapal Secretary Denies Sect Will Form League of Nations.

VATICAN CITY, July 5.—(AP)—The pope's injunction that Catholics as Catholics, in no matter what country, should "stand outside and above all political parties" was reiterated in a statement from the papal secretary of state's office today, denying reports of the founding of a "Catholic League of Nations." These reports grew out of a meeting last Sunday in Paris of Cardinal Bourne, of England, and Cardinal Verdier, of France.

Replying to a query regarding the reports published in London and elsewhere, one of the undersecretaries of state said that no mystery had been attached to the meeting of the cardinals or the foundation of a federation between the already existing society for the maintenance of the apostolic see, with headquarters in London, and the "Volontaires Du Pape" (the pope's volunteers) with headquarters in Paris.

Cardinal Bourne is president of the English society and Cardinal Verdier the French one. The federation was formed in Paris on the occasion of the feast of their common protector, Saints Peter and Paul, on June 29. Both groups came together in the basilica of the Sacred Heart on top of Montmartre for solemn religious rites and "to establish between them a federation, as both had the same aim, namely: defense and aid to the prestige of the holy see among Catholics and in the face of all."

The undersecretary's statement said the federation of the two groups similar in origin and scope, would in no wise modify the character of the religious and spiritual activity of the federated associations.

The statement said reports of the formation of a Catholic international political party were ridiculous, particularly in view of the pope's injunction that Catholics, as Catholics, in no matter what country, should "stand outside and above all political parties."

The statement made the point that the "constant and universally applied directives of Pius XI are against the confusion of Catholic activity with political activity."

MISSISSIPPI A. & M.
SHAKES UP TEACHERS

GULFPORT, Miss., July 5.—(AP)—In a drastic shake-up of the departmental heads at Mississippi A. & M. College by the board of trustees of the university and colleges here today, Lee Denson, Lucedale, was named director of extension forces, succeeding R. S. Wilson, for 20 years the occupant of the office.

Other important changes at A. & M. College included the appointment of J. C. Robert, Macon, as director of experimental stations, replacing J. E. Ricks, for 10 years holder of that office.

Senator Len G. North, Belzoni, was named secretary at A. & M. College in place of M. H. Moore, while at M. S. C. W. that position was tendered H. B. Graves, Ellisville, 1927, manager of Governor Bilbo. Mr. Graves succeeds F. F. Parsons, Miss Nelly Kiern, acting president of M. S. C. W. since the death of President J. C. Pant, was dismissed from the institution when her former position as dean of women was given to Miss Clyde H. Evans, Columbia.

The changes in administrative heads as well as employees at A. & M. College were made by the board in session here in the summer executive offices of Governor Bilbo.

Three new college heads appointed three weeks ago by the board, appeared before the group with recommendations. They were Chancellor-elect J. N. Powers, university; President-elect Hugh Critt, A. & M.; and President-elect R. E. L. Sutherland, of M. S. C. W.

Robert D. Morrow, state adjutant of the American Athletic Union, was named director of athletics at A. & M. College, replacing W. D. Chadwick.

Employment of Christian Keener (Red) Cagle, West Point football star and native Louisianan, as assistant football coach at an annual salary of $3,500 was approved. Cagle will report to A. & M. College September 1 and will spend three months each year for three years in football coaching.

For Women in Industry

The fourth session of the Southern Summer School for Women Workers in Industry will be conducted at Christian School for Boys in Arden, N. C., near Asheville, for the six weeks between July 10 and August 22. The change in location was made necessary by the closing of the Carolina New College.

Women engaged in industries in Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee meet annually and discuss the industrial situation of the south at these summer schools. Thirty-five women have been accepted for enrollment this year.

Miss Mary C. Barker, Atlanta school principal and president of the American Federation of Teachers, is chairman of a committee of educators and workers sponsoring the school. Miss Peggy Lou Armstrong, of Agnes Scott College, is an assistant member of the faculty.

Civic Music Association Announces
Four Attractions for 1930-31 Season

Left, Henri Verbrugge, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony orchestra, which will appear at the auditorium on February 10 as one of the attractions of the Civic Music Association. Center, Marion Claire, soprano, and Henry Weber, accompanist, coming to the Wesley Memorial auditorium on November 4. Right, John Charles Thomas, baritone, in recital at Wesley Memorial on January 8. Below, Manuel and Williamson, piano duettists, coming to Wesley Memorial on March 12.

Four outstanding concert attractions for Atlanta during the season of 1930-31 were announced Saturday by Mrs. Wilmer L. Moore, vice president of the Civic Music Association. These concerts were made possible by the campaign for membership in the association conducted in March by the Atlanta Music Club. There will be no public sale of tickets for any of the four attractions, admission being by membership card only.

The series will open on Tuesday, November 4, with Marion Claire, soprano, and Henry Weber, accompanist. On Thursday, January 8, John Charles Thomas, the noted baritone, will give a recital and on February 10 the famous Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra will be the attraction. Manuel and Williamson, the distinguished "two piano" pianists, will conclude the series on March 12, including in their program 20 minutes of Bach compositions played on harpsichords.

All attractions will be presented at the Wesley Memorial auditorium except the Minneapolis orchestra, which will be heard at the city auditorium.

While the membership list for the coming season closed last March, there was some confusion, said Mrs. Moore, among former members who received the impression they had until September in which to renew their memberships. For this reason the time for renewals has been extended until July 25, after which date no renewals whatever will be accepted.

Membership cards, Mrs. Moore stated, will be issued in September in time for the first program of the season by the Music Club, which is scheduled for October 1. Association membership entitles the holder to admission to the Music Club programs also.

Wounds by Negro
Fatal to Farmer

WARRENTON, Va., July 5.—(AP)—Allie Corbin, 55 years old, farmer, shot last Sunday night by Ellwood Payne, negro, died of his wounds in a Warrenton hospital today.

His daughter, Estelle, shot and burned by the same negro, on the same night, was in a critical condition at the hospital, and Isabelle, another daughter, also shot and burned by Payne, was suffering from wounds, but was expected to recover, attaches said.

Physicians said Corbin's death was attributable to gunshot wounds, and not to burns received when Payne set fire to the automobile in which Corbin lay after he was shot.

Judge J. T. H. Alexander tonight expected a special grand jury to hear the case. Payne first denied, but later confessed to Sheriff Woolf, Commonwealth's Attorney C. W. Carter, of Fauquier, and Commonwealth's Attorney John Galleher, London, that he shot Corbin and his two daughters, and later placed them in an automobile saturated with gasoline, and set fire to the automobile and then after he poured oil on their clothing.

Payne tonight was carefully guarded in the county jail at Warrenton.

Secrecy Shrouds
Coming Execution

CANON CITY, Col., July 5.—(AP)—Secrecy will attend the execution of Ralph Fleagle, bank robber and convicted murderer who is sentenced to die at the state penitentiary here some time during the week beginning at midnight tonight.

Warden Francis E. Crawford said today no information concerning the exact time of the execution would be given out and that only the bare facts would be announced after the hanging. Newspapersmen will not be permitted to witness the execution.

The penitentiary is under heavy guard as the result of rumors that John Fleagle, brother of Ralph, will make a desperate effort to free the condemned man. Jake Fleagle participated with Ralph in the robbery of the First National bank of Lamar, Col., in May, 1928, involving the murder of four men. He had eluded capture.

Howard L. Rorston and George J. Abshire, other members of the Fleagle gang, are sentenced to be hanged the week following Ralph Fleagle's execution.

Ranges of Idaho
Combed in War
On Wild HorsesMenaces to Live Stock Men Rounded Up and Sent to Canneries.

BOISE, Idaho, July 5.—(UN)—Probability that the wild horse will follow the trail of the buffalo and be driven completely out of the range-land, taking with it another reminder of the old pioneer west, was seen in the activities of range riders and organized roundup crews who have been busy for several weeks herding "broom-tails" and mustangs, plowhorses and other types of animals into corrals.

The annual drive on wild horses threatened to clear the ranges of the last vestige of the fiery tribe of animals that used to range the open country of the west. Riders were covering the wide section lying in northern Nevada, southwestern Idaho and southeastern Oregon, rounding up all horses running loose on the range, sorting out those sporting brands, auctioning the better grade of unclaimed animals for individual use, and auctioning the culls to representatives of horsemeat canning factories.

Buffaloes were destroyed by widespread drives of hunters seeking their hides for robes, once so popular. Wild horses are being driven from the ranges and shipped to canning factories; if permitted to continue running wild, they multiply and spread until they present a real menace to the livestock man by eating grass that must be used for more valuable animals, and by carrying disease that may be spread among ranchers' stock.

Some of the wild horses may be broken and trained for domestic use. But most of them are useless. They are transplanted from the wide open spaces of the west to the cramped confines of tin cans. Most of the carcasses consigned to packing plants are used in the manufacture of meat-feed products for sale to operators of poultry ranches, for farnas, dog kennels and fish hatcheries. The better grades of horse meat are canned for shipment to European markets, and equine steaks are said to be more or less popular in some of the larger city markets of this country.

New Hot Spell
Here; Mercury
Hits 94 Degrees

A thermometer standing at 94 degrees Saturday afternoon ushered in another hot spell which, although weather bureau officials said it would not equal that of two weeks ago, will keep the mercury in the nineties for a few days.

Today will be fair, it was forecast, with a temperature of about 95 degrees. Low temperatures will be near that of Saturday, when a low of 87 degrees was recorded.

Reports received at the local weather bureau are that high temperatures are prevailing in the southeast, extending on into the Missouri valley. The immediate cause, it was said, is a low pressure area which Saturday afternoon was over the state of Iowa.

A low pressure area in that vicinity, it was said, causes southeast winds in Atlanta, which during the summer can usually be counted on to bring heat. Hour-by-hour temperatures from midnight Friday until 7 o'clock Saturday night were as follows:

Plane Joy Riders
Die in S. F. Bay

ALAMEDA, Cal., July 5.—(AP)—Alameda police expressed belief today that Rene Medus, 19, Alameda, and a youth known as "Lefty" York, 20, Vallejo pugilist, were killed when an airplane dived 1,000 feet into San Francisco bay last night.

Both were reported missing and before the plane was taken without permission from its hangar, police said.

Efforts were made to bring the submerged plane closer to shore before raising it.

Airport attendants said they saw the plane trundled from its hangar but assumed its owners were to take a ride. Within a few minutes it had taken off dizzily and reaching 1,000 feet dived almost vertically into the water.

EVOLUTION OF BODIES GIVES ENGINEERS FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Transformable Models Regarded as Next Step

Designers Work on Idea of Building Open and Closed Car Into One.

BY E. V. WATSON.
(Written exclusively for The Atlanta Constitution and the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

DETROIT, Mich., July 5.—The evolution of the motor car body is giving the engineers food for thought. Compilation of 1929 data has revealed the fact that it took ten years for closed cars to supersede completely the open models in family use. What will be the next progressive step? How long will it take to make it? These are questions company executives are pondering. Some of them believe that the convertible cars will be the next trend of design.

Literally, it would mean that the open car and the closed car would be rolled into one. Thereby the average man's car would be instantly transformable into a model that would have the convenience of either type by one or two quick twists of the wrist.

"Transformable" is a term already applied by several builders to models they are now manufacturing. It is conceded, however, that the idea as it may be finally worked out, still is in the early stages of development.

Convertible Sedan.
The "convertible sedan" also is included in the body types produced by various makers. It came first from experimental models made in Europe. In contrast with the early types of touring cars with flapping curtains that could be closed up, the convertible sedan virtually is a closed body that can be opened. In other words, the top is collapsible when an open car is desired for the fine weather use, while as a closed car it should be windproof and weather-tight with no rattles or other annoyances.

The problem still to be solved appears to be that of easy and quick change from one to the other while driving.

The possibility of such cars in the future were a subject of discussion before the body division of the Detroit section, Society of Automotive Engineers, at one of its spring assemblies here.

L. Clayton Hill, chairman emeritus of the Detroit engineering group, gave a talk and led a discussion on it.

In the course of this it was brought out that the present world-wide vogue for the outdoor life, vigorous health and sun-tan is assumed to presage a demand by motorists for a vehicle that will remove them from the "shut-in" class.

Moreover, large portions of the United States enjoy climatic and meteorological conditions that make riding in a car with the top folded back comfortable and beneficial.

Weather Favorable.
A check of government weather reports in the Michigan area showed that during the months from May to September, inclusive, there was no rainfall on 118 days out of 152. The weather man also had found that during this period the sun had been shining 1,442 hours out of a possible 2,149.

Thus, it was deduced that it would have been possible to have enjoyed a major part of the summer months in this section of the country without being cooped up in a closed car. In Europe, they have sensed the demand for a convertible vehicle, but have started off on a different track.

They have developed bodies which are essentially sedans with sliding or "stowable" middle-roof sections. These are largely intended for sight-seeing in the country, especially in mountainous regions.

As to convertible cars becoming a factor in mass production, Mr. Hill believed there was such a possibility. "Attempts have been made," he said, "to build convertible bodies by using sash glasses in the doors in combination with a top which is largely a heritage from the old-time open car top. This part-way step is seldom if ever satisfactory."

Design of Top.

News of the Italian government action decreeing an immediate increase of 110 and up to 120 per cent in the tariff on American cars, reached Detroit on Wednesday just as the export committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce was holding a session. It found the members in the act of naming a subcommittee to promote the exchange among American automobile manufacturers of export data.

Tariff Retaliation.
This is to be done with the world divided into eight major sales zones. Plans also call for study of factors affecting merchandising of motor cars in foreign countries. No official statement on the Italian action was forthcoming, but the feeling was expressed that it might be taken as retaliation against America.

Trade reports from Paris say that despite the recent French increase, more American cars have been sold so far this year than in 1929. First quarter registrations of American machines were 3,791 as compared with 2,851 in the same period last year.

The view is that it would be dangerous to deduce from this that 1930 will be a better American automobile year in France than 1929. The increased tariffs did not go into effect until the middle of April and their effect has not yet begun to show in official figures.

No official statement on the Italian action was forthcoming, but the feeling was expressed that it might be taken as retaliation against America.

Trade reports from Paris say that despite the recent French increase, more American cars have been sold so far this year than in 1929. First quarter registrations of American machines were 3,791 as compared with 2,851 in the same period last year.

The view is that it would be dangerous to deduce from this that 1930 will be a better American automobile year in France than 1929. The increased tariffs did not go into effect until the middle of April and their effect has not yet begun to show in official figures.

As to convertible cars becoming a factor in mass production, Mr. Hill believed there was such a possibility. "Attempts have been made," he said, "to build convertible bodies by using sash glasses in the doors in combination with a top which is largely a heritage from the old-time open car top. This part-way step is seldom if ever satisfactory."

Design of Top.

News of the Italian government action decreeing an immediate increase of 110 and up to 120 per cent in the tariff on American cars, reached Detroit on Wednesday just as the export committee of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce was holding a session. It found the members in the act of naming a subcommittee to promote the exchange among American automobile manufacturers of export data.

Tariff Retaliation.
This is to be done with the world divided into eight major sales zones. Plans also call for study of factors affecting merchandising of motor cars in foreign countries. No official statement on the Italian action was forthcoming, but the feeling was expressed that it might be taken as retaliation against America.

Dodge '8' Mileage Marathon Car

The president of Dodge Brothers Corporation, K. T. Keller, hands over to General Sales Manager A. van DerZee the keys of the Dodge 8 Mileage Marathon car at the end of the final assembly line. The car left Detroit July 1 on the first of the countless trips to be made from coast to coast and border to border.

Woco Pep Wins Outboard Race At Palm Beach

Long before Colonel T. Tooley's recent remarkable victory at Palm Beach, where his speedy craft, "Miss Celo," won the $25,000 Sir Thomas Lipton trophy, Woco-Pep was immensely popular with owners of outboard racing boats.

Colonel Tooley, after defeating 15 worthy contestants in the Lipton trophy race conducted by the Palm Beach Anglers' and Sports' Club, expressed the opinion that Woco-Pep and its companion, Tielene Motor Oil, makes the best combination possible to put in an outboard motor for winning results.

What Woco-Pep and Tielene give to the motor of a racing craft, pep, added power and a smooth, frictionless drive, they give to the motor of a pleasure car, and thousands upon thousands of motor car owners have learned this fact. That is why the 4,500 stations which dispense these famous Pure Oil Company products from Virginia and Mississippi realize a constantly increasing demand for them.

As one well-known motorist puts it, "It stands to reason that a combination use of a motor fuel that is so volatile that it fires every atom at the spark, burns clean and is all power, and a motor oil so expertly refined from the highest grade crude that it stands up under terrific heat and gives perfect lubrication for a thousand miles, is the most satisfactory, dependable and economical."

Charles W. Dobbs To Manage Carroll Service Station

The J. L. Carroll Company, corner of Spring and Harris streets, announce the appointment of Charles W. Dobbs as manager. Mr. Dobbs is well known to Atlanta motorists and has been in the auto tire business in this city since 1904. Before that time he was in the bicycle tire business.

CHARLES W. DOBBS.

Mr. Dobbs' wide experience places him in the position of being able to advise motorists how to get every available mile out of a tire. He knows tires from the ground up and he applies this knowledge in a way to give the motorist the utmost in tire service.

The J. L. Carroll Company is handling Firestone products and besides tire service gives complete lubricating service, washing, polishing, battery service, brake testing, adjusting, etc.

Exclusive Tread Feature of New Seiberling Tires

One of the reasons why Seiberling tires are so popular everywhere, in spite of their reputation for higher prices, is the special tread compound developed by Seiberling engineers to give increased wear under all driving conditions, roads and speeds. It is the final results of months of experimenting and tests which have shown time and time again that the Seiberling Affinity Tread will wear from 25 to 50 per cent slower than the tread compound generally employed.

This exclusive feature combined with the use of pure gum in the construction of the tire carcass and the flexible carcass design produces a tire with greater flexibility and stamina when subjected to road shocks and high speeds. The walls are constructed to give freely and spring back into place promptly. This results in a greater degree of riding ease, as the whole weight of the car is carried on the air in the tire rather than on the walls of the tire itself.

Brooks-Shawley, 1643 Jonesboro road, Lakewood, West End Tire & Battery Company, 774 Gordon street, S. W., and Miller Service, 3070 Peachtree road, 2161 Peachtree road, N. E., Buckhead, are the independent dealers selling Seiberling tires in Atlanta. Having ordered several carloads already this season they have a complete stock of fresh tires on hand in spite of record-breaking sales.

Valdosta Citizen Gets Part For 1905 Buick Car

That the Buick Motor Company places no time limit on its obligation to supply service parts to Buick owners was demonstrated recently when the factory shipped out a small unit for a 25-year-old Buick owned by L. N. Havenkotte, of Valdosta, Ga. The order was shipped within 48 hours of its receipt.

"We have an old 1905 Buick touring car. The thrust ball races in the transmission are getting bad. Can you furnish these parts and at what cost? We are very proud of this Buick and want to keep it going."

The letter, signed by Mr. Havenkotte, was dated April 19; the requested parts were shipped on April 25.

The old Georgia car is only one of many quarter-century old Buicks that are still owned in various parts of the country and the factory is prepared to service them just as completely as it services the present 1930 model and every other car produced in Buick's long history.

Growing Demand For Convertible Cars Predicted

That the demand for convertible sedans designed to meet the needs of open or closed driving in fair or inclement weather will show steady increase, is the opinion of Robert C. Graham, vice president of the Graham-Paige Motors Corporation.

"Every year more and more buyers are attracted to the convertible type of body," Mr. Graham says, "for the convertible model enables the motorist to enjoy open car advantages in fair weather and offers closed car comfort and convenience when the season demands."

"Motorists appreciate the all-weather models, too, because they can be converted from open to closed cars or vice versa simply by folding or raising the top, an operation which has been simplified in recent years and now requires little effort on the part of the motorist."

"In addition to its utility, the Graham eight convertible is one of the most beautiful body models we have introduced. Of all body models, it is one of the most distinctive in appearance and design."

"I was impressed by the large number of convertible cars in Europe, and I believe that we will see an even greater popularity of this model here in our own country."

The new Graham special eight convertible sedan, which we recently introduced, has been so well received that we expect a much larger volume of business on this car than we originally anticipated," said Mr. Graham.

Rich's Tire and Battery Department

Under the direction of Hugh D. Brower, the tire and battery department of Rich's is fast becoming one of the most successful department store tire and battery stations in the south. It caters especially to persons already customers of Rich's in the regular monthly account billing as well as an attractive 30, 60 or 90-day budget plan. The department has held the distributing franchise for Kelly Springfield tires several months and recently took the agency for Exide batteries, which, according to Mr. Brower, has been a popular addition. "One of our features," Mr. Brower says, "is that our patrons can park in our own garage free for three hours. This time is given them so their shopping tour of the store can go on without interruption to move their cars."

New Reos Simplify Driving In Traffic and on Hills

The new Reo passenger car models, equipped with silent-second transmission, are particularly adaptable for summer touring requirements, according to Frank North, manager of Reo Sales and Service, Inc., 402 Peachtree.

"Reo's new silent-second transmission, which is as silent in second gear as the ordinary high, and which simplifies driving in heavy traffic and on hills because of its easy shifting qualities, eliminates from summer driving several of its most important annoyances," he declares.

"One of the greatest sources of delay and annoyance in connection with the summer-vacation trip is the lost time incidental to hill and mountain driving. The old type transmission which took the car up a steep incline at a snail's pace is just as much out of date as the two-wheel brake. Driving in city traffic also has been simplified by the new transmission first by making the use of second gear as acceptable as high because of the noise elimination, and second because of the added pickup and speed with second gear now possible."

The new transmission, with three speeds forward and one reverse, includes a second gear as silent as the ordinary high. It permits easy shifting, without clashing or grinding, from second into high at any speed and from high into second at 40 miles an hour.

Reo passenger cars, this year, are available in three distinct models, the Flying Cloud models 25 and 20 and the Reo Model 15. The 25 and 20 are both equipped with the silent-second transmission. The Flying Cloud 25 is available in a standard and sport sedan; the Flying Cloud Model 20 in a standard coupe, sport coupe, standard sedan and sport sedan, and the Model 15 in a business-man's coupe, standard coupe, standard sedan, sport coupe and sport sedan.

New Development In Engineering On Studebaker

Studebaker is introducing in a few days what is said to be the greatest advance in automotive engineering in 10 years. According to the manufacturer, this new development involves a basic engineering principle which will be new not only to the Studebaker President and Commanders but to American motordom as well.

The new development, it is said, offers motorists an entirely new and pleasurable driving sensation and effects an appreciable saving in operating costs. It is said that greatest economies are effected under conditions such as in traffic and over mountainous terrain in which the conventional car makes its greatest demands on fuel and oil.

Besides this major development, the new series Studebaker President and Commander eights will be equipped with additional engineering advances which introduce new standards of smoothness and quiet operation in American motoring as well as new details of body design, which reflect the last word in comfort, convenience and smart appearance.

Reports that a number of manufacturers are bringing out new eight-cylinder cars emphasize Studebaker's foresight in pioneering popular priced eights three years ago, according to Paul G. Hoffman, vice president of the Studebaker Corporation. Studebaker's claim that its new eights are seasoned eights is based on the success of over 100,000 eights in owners' hands and the championship performance of Studebaker eights attested by five world records, 18 international records and more American cars record than all other makes of cars combined.

AN EIGHT that far outstrips PRICE COMPETITION

BEYOND all question, a good eight-cylinder motor has certain advantages over a good motor of fewer cylinders. The De Soto Straight Eight was designed for motorists who prefer eight-cylinder performance to any other kind, but who refuse to pay the prices heretofore asked for good eights. It stands comparison with any of them in flexibility, smoothness and agility of performance. It is appealingly smart in appearance; staunch in construction; rich in stamina. You feel the quality of the car in the way it rides; in the way it handles; in the way it responds. Chrysler engineering genius and Chrysler manufacturing efficiency have made it the lowest-priced eight ever built to such fine quality standards.

SOCIAL SERVICE WORK DESCRIBED BY MILLER

More Needy Cases Served With Less Money, Report Reveals.

Magnitude of the task of Atlanta social service workers, faced by increasing appeals for assistance and hampered by inadequate public response to the needs of welfare organizations, was described Saturday in the monthly service report of the Atlanta Community Chest.

The report showed a total of 18,216 individuals and families served by the 30 societies of the Chest in May, and bore this comment by Frank Miller, executive director:

"These have been strenuous days for social workers. Demands for assistance have increased over the average for the same period during the past two years. Sickened and unemployed have been the chief causes. We have had less money to use, but we have worked all the harder. Social workers are trying sympathetically and patiently to meet every human need. They do not give up to weariness and discouragement in the face of great difficulties.

"It is comparatively easy for people to find fault with the Chest and its agencies in times such as these through which we are passing. We record our appreciation of the many friends who write us words of encouragement and send in checks to help us on with our work. Just now we need a stream of money to help us meet Atlanta's needs."

The report showed a total of 7,001 families and individuals served by the 12 agencies of the family relief and direct service group.

Welfare Society served 1,212 families, with a total of more than 5,000 members. The Community Employment Service undertook to find employment for 1,547 individuals. The Tuberculosis Association, one member of its group, served 1,858 persons in its program of health conservation.

The 11 societies of the child welfare group within the Chest gave shelter, instruction, and medical service to 1,377 little children who otherwise would have been menaced by disaster from neglect and unwholesome associations.

The seven societies of the character-forming group, working among young men and women, and girls, served a total of 8,714.

The report showed an increase of operations of the Community Shop, which is designed to give employment to men and women handicapped by blindness or other infirmities, and to put an end to street begging. A daily average of 15 handicapped persons were employed there.

Postoffice Receipts Show $6,000 Increase

Postoffice receipts in Atlanta showed an increase of more than $6,000 in the first six months of 1930, despite the talk of depression in business, it was reported Saturday by John J. Martin, assistant postmaster.

The increase was taken by Mr. Martin as indicative of a general healthy condition of business in Atlanta. Postal receipts are a fairly accurate barometer of business conditions. The increase, particularly in the greater part of it, was in June, is most encouraging.

"We have, in my opinion, passed the crest of the depression and are now heading for normal conditions."

Total receipts for the first six months of 1930 were $2,292,788.03, and in the first six months of 1929 were $2,286,174.65. The increase was $6,613.38.

June receipts of the local postoffice were $346,206.42. In June, 1929, they were $339,992.03, showing an increase for the past June of $6,214.39 over the same month of last year.

Mr. Martin said that $2,000 of the increase was represented by increased sales of stamps, and $4,000 in increased revenues from the sales of permits. The rate of the increase was 1.5 per cent.

Green drew the larger fine upon his admission that he was responsible for most of the racket-making.

FURNITURE DEALERS TO HOLD STYLE SHOW

"Women of America have reached the pinnacle of prosperity in their observations of home decoration and arrangement," Paul Duffee, of Duffee-Freeman Furniture Company, said Saturday on departing for Chicago and Grand Rapids to select the latest furniture designs to be displayed in his store this fall.

Furniture dealers regard the 1930 summer markets as the most important held in many years. Mr. Duffee said, "A home furnishings style show will be held in every city and town of consequence throughout the United States from September 26 to October 4 and the smartest ideas of designers of home furnishings will be shown at the markets. Merchandise selected by dealers at the markets this month will be for fall delivery."

"The most particular woman in the world is the American woman. Furnishings that pleased her a few years ago are not marketable today. Her increased knowledge of home decoration together with changes in social structures of cities have brought new demands upon the designers of furnishings."

"It is because of this keen knowledge of the American woman that the retail dealers and manufacturers decided to hold the first national home furnishings style show this year. For eight days starting September 26 retail furniture dealers throughout the United States will display in their stores the new designs that have been created to meet the demand of the age."

Mr. Duffee said that dealers of Atlanta expected to have the greatest offering of styles this fall, both from the standpoint of smartness and variety, ever shown in this city. The first display of this merchandise will be made at the home furnishings style show, in which home furnishings dealers will participate.

Shark Makes Meal Of Jurist's Tarpon

SARASOTA, Fla., July 5.—(AP)—Even a judge can't do anything about it if a big shark orders breakfast and snatches away the 100-pound tarpon on his line.

Federal Judge Alexander C. Akerman, of Tampa, was struggling with his first tarpon in the waters off Sarasota today when along cruised the shark "40 feet in length." Without notice the shark ate breakfast and left a bewildered judge holding a dangling line.

Since witnesses count in both court and fish tales, the judge had Nathan R. Graham, assistant United States attorney at Jacksonville; Attorney N. G. Robertson, of Sarasota, and Ben Seal, guide, who estimated the shark's length.

The same party controlled the last congress and carried Ortiz Rubio into the presidency. The military police have taken precautions throughout the country to check possible disturbances.

Mother's Mistake Costs Man Life

CHARLESTON, S. C., July 5.—(AP)—Because a mother feared her child was lost in the surf, Riley Benson, 24, leaped into the waves at Folly Island, near here, yesterday and was drowned while the "lost" child watched from its play in the sand.

Benson, a strong swimmer, answered the mother's frantic cries by plunging into the surf. He was caught in the undertow and called for help. John J. Irwin, Red Cross life saver examiner, went to Benson's aid and brought him to the beach dead. The name of the mother was not learned.

HOOVER CALLS PARTY LEADERS TO KICK OUT HUSTON AS REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CHAIRMAN

Mayson Declares Couch Subject to Impeachment

MAYOR PRO TEM. VIOLATED OATH, ATTORNEY SAYS

Criticism Continues To Be Heaped Upon Official for Liberating 273 City Prison Inmates.

MANY PRISONERS ARE BACK IN TOILS

Alderman Millican To Confer With Mayson on What Steps City Council Can Take in Matter.

Mayor Pro Tem, J. Allen Couch, who, as acting mayor of Atlanta, Thursday ordered the release of 273 prisoners from the Atlanta negro prison and city dairy farm, is subject to impeachment under a ruling of City Attorney James L. Mayson Saturday.

As criticism continued to be heaped upon the mayor pro tem for what was termed his "unwise action" in ordering every one of the city prisoners incarcerated in the various places of detention released as a "Fourth of July present," many of the released again found themselves within the toils of the law, several were en route to the farms again and two were back at the stockade serving new sentences.

"Release of many of the prisoners was in violation of the law and as such constitutes a violation of the oath of office Mr. Couch took," Mr. Mayson declared when asked for a ruling on that point.

"He is, therefore, subject to impeachment for violation of his oath, and the charges could be filed by any member of council. If a private citizen were to file a complaint against him asking impeachment, the charge would, according to the law, have to be sworn to."

Alderman Ed A. Gilliam Saturday night declared that the ruling of City Attorney Mayson put a different face on the matter and that council could hardly afford not to take some action on the situation.

He said that he was not prepared to say just what action would be taken but that he will confer with other members of council by telephone today to get their ideas of the proper steps.

Mayor Displeased.
Mayor L. N. Bagdasarian, on his return to Atlanta, issued a statement Saturday in which he refrained from any criticism of Couch but in which he set out his attitude in the matter, declaring that he will consult the city council to see what action should be taken.

Text of the mayor's statement follows:
"During my term as mayor I have refused to grant requests for pardons from any persons who had been sentenced by recorders or recorders pro tem for any violation of the borough ordinance without first consulting the city council."

"The judges are elected by voters of our city to try offenders and render the evidence. I assume they are fair. In a very few instances, where the families of offenders were in extreme need, I have appealed to the judges to send me recommendations for a change of sentence, which, on their recommendation, I approved."

"I believed I was due the recorder's office. I assume they are fair. In a very few instances, where the families of offenders were in extreme need, I have appealed to the judges to send me recommendations for a change of sentence, which, on their recommendation, I approved."

Millican to Confer.
Alderman G. Everett Millican, provisional mayor pro tem, declared he would confer with Mr. Mayson to ascertain just what rights council had in the matter.

Previously Mr. Millican, along with several other members of council, had criticized Couch's action.

At the same time Recorder Murphy M. Holloway, judge of the second division, threw the matter squarely up to council in stating that it is an executive matter and should be handled by the executive department or by council itself.

A check of the list of those pardoned by the blanket order, which has been termed a "wholesale jail delivery," shows that 175 of those who were turned out were released illegally.

Mayor's Authority.
Under the law the mayor has authority to pardon those whose fines exceed $50 or who are sentenced for 30 days or more, but he cannot under the law pardon a person whose fine is less than $50 or whose sentence is less than 30 days without a recommendation from the judge who sentenced the individual.

Acting Mayor Couch did not consult either of the recorders before issuing the order.

Hunter Brothers and Sister Begin To Cash in On Weary Weeks in Air.

BY STANLEY WHITAKER, United News Staff Correspondent. CHICAGO, July 5.—(UN)—The dazed Hunter brothers started down the road of fame and fortune today, flanked by six managers.

Hardly permitted to sleep after flying 23 days without stopping, John and Kenneth Hunter, farmer boys from Sparta, Ill., started to cash in on the longest flight in the history of the world which ended last night at Sky Harbor airport.

The youths, who dug coal to buy their first airplane, had plenty of direction in their struggle toward fortune, most of it contradictory and some unsolicited.

John and Kenneth were awakened about noon in the bungalow atop the Sherman hotel by their sister, and cook, Irene. It took her an hour to get them out of bed after an eight-hour sleep, but the managers were on the job bright and early.

After much haranguing and gesticulation it was decided that the fliers' first cash appearance would be at the Palace theater. The decision was made only about an hour before the debut was scheduled and the Hunter boys, being better fliers than actors, immediately went into a huddle to learn the lines that hadn't been written.

Their stage contract is for four daily appearances for a week at the Palace, after that they may move the skit over to two other theaters.

Harry T. Perkins, of St. Louis, who seemed to be the most dominant of the Hunters' managers, was the stage manager for the show.

Perkins stood before the footlights at the Palace and one by one in order called out Albert and Walter, who piloted the refueling ship; Irene, who prepared the meals, and John and Kenneth.

Irene was resplendent in a black and white ensemble from a Michigan boulevard shop and her brothers wore suits. The brothers mumbled a few words and retired, but Irene was less bashful.

"I only supervised the cooking," she said, "but I want you to know that I can cook too."

This line "brought down the house." The brothers' speeches:

Albert—"We were in the refueler and didn't have much to do with the flight, but we're proud of John and Kenneth."

Walter—"I'm lucky to have such brothers."

John—"We're sorry we had to come down when we did, but our motor gave out and we thought it was best to land while the landing was good."

Kenneth—"We're glad to bring the record to Chicago, and we're going to keep it here."

Perkins indicated the fliers would leave Chicago with three trucks for Hollywood, but said negotiations with motion picture concerns had not been completed as yet.

Perkins declared today with the title of "general manager." No one seemed to know who appointed him and his authority was challenged at intervals by the five others.

Clyde Elliott assumed the title of "theatrical manager." B. J. Majewski, who had acted at the airport, seemed to have lost out and was dubbed "ex-manager." Wilson Heron and Mike Coyrold, who claim to own an interest in the record-breaking plane, also were on hand with advice in plentiful quantities and on the outskirts of the ring around the fliers was a man who called himself Benjamin Benjamin and admitted he, too, was a "manager."

It all seemed part of a dream to the Hunter boys, the scrambling, the haste and confusion. They blinked and followed first one suggestion, then another.

Also dazed by the fame that had come to the farm family was Mrs. Ida Hunter, mother of the youths, who spent the last few days of the flight here at the airport fearing for her boys' lives but forbidding that any news of her anxiety should get to them.

For the first time in her life Mrs. Hunter had breakfast in bed in the Sherman.

"I've never had breakfast in bed in my life and won't start now," she said when a waiter brought her a tray. She succumbed at the sight of the choice food, however.

Irene revealed that she, the four brothers and another sister now ill in Danville, N. Y., are going to form a "flying six" and tour the country. Asked if they expected to fly across any oceans she said:

GANG OUTBREAKS TAKE FOUR LIVES DURING SATURDAY

Two More Are Slain in Detroit and Cleveland Joins List With Pair of Murders.

DETROIT, July 5.—(P)—The second gangster assassination in 36 hours today sent a Hamtramck prohibition investigator and an alleged bootlegger to their deaths, bringing the total number of gun victims here this week to four.

The investigator, Barney Roth, was shot down in the kitchen of his home by one of two men who entered at breakfast time. The other man shot, Johnny Mietz, was to have been arraigned in federal court today on a beer-making charge. Mietz had been sitting on Roth's front porch waiting for the latter to go to court with him.

After an all-day investigation by police of Hamtramck, a suburban city which is surrounded on all sides by parts of Detroit, Charles T. Winegar, commissioner of public safety, said that he believes Roth was killed because he "promised protection he could not deliver." Mietz, he said, apparently was a victim of his association with the investigator.

Roth acted as an undercover man for Hamtramck and federal officers and was carried on the Hamtramck police payroll as a patrolman. Mrs. Roth said one of the killers had been to see him previously to ask his assistance in some case. He had agreed to help Mietz, she said, accounting for the latter's presence.

The new killing came while police still were trying to learn the identity of the gunman who shot William Cannon and George Collins to death Thursday night as they sat in an automobile in front of a downtown hotel. Detectives who examined witnesses in Chicago said that they were convinced the killing was not connected with the beer racket there as at first believed.

TWO DIE IN CLEVELAND.
CLEVELAND, Ohio, July 5.—(P)—The familiar staccato of gangland spoke for the second time within two weeks here late today and Joe Porrello, latest Cleveland bootlegger sugar baron, and Sam Tilocco, his first lieutenant, are dead.

Porrello, who is said to have gained his wealth and high position in "the trade" not without irritation and apprehension of numerous competitors, was shot while near the door in the restaurant of Frank Milano. Tilocco fell as he stood just outside.

Porrello gained control of the bootlegging business here when a land killed "Big Joe" and John Leonardo in October, 1927. Porrello and his six brothers combined with Sam "Black Jack" Todaro in the business, according to police.

In 1928 Todaro was slain. For his death "Big Joe's" son, Angelo, and Dominic Suspirato recently were sentenced to life imprisonment.

More and more evident in recent weeks did it become that trouble was brewing in the corn sugar business. Three Porrellos were arrested on concealed weapon and liquor charges.

Then last week Leo Isar, king of the Akron sugar trade, abdicated because he feared the Porrellos. He said that Cleveland corn sugar dealers had told him to get out of Akron or be "put on the spot."

Only a square from the Milano restaurant, Charles Volotto, 28, alleged gangster and "muscle man," was slain last week, his body riddled by shotgun slugs.

Girl Found Murdered On New Jersey Road

BUTLER, N. J., July 6.—(Sunday)—(P)—The body of a young woman, shot twice, was found in an automobile on the Marlinton road about five miles northwest of here, early this morning. In the car was a note saying "you will find the other bodies along the road."

Discovery of the body and the note started state troopers on a hunt along lonely roads of the surrounding territory for other victims mentioned.

The Marlinton road is a deserted thoroughfare sometimes used as a shortcut between Butler and West Milford. The coupe was noticed along the road throughout the day. Tonight passersby looked in and saw the body slumped to the floor with two bullet wounds in her head.

It is believed that the murder took place some time during the night of the Fourth.

Lost Pyrotechnic Takes Boy's Hand

HAGERSTOWN, Md., July 5.—(P)—Foraging about the fair grounds today a fireworks demonstration was staged without a casualty last night before a crowd of 10,000. Merle D. Cramer, 13, today picked up an unexploded piece, applied a match, and in the explosion his right hand was so mangled it had to be amputated.

Gridiron Romance Climaxed In Broyles-Pund Engagement

Society's chronicles rob another man of his identity today as the engagement of Miss Susan Calhoun Broyles and Mr. Henry Rudolph Pund is announced.

Miss Susan Calhoun Broyles is well-known and well-liked. Yet who, one wonders, is this Henry Rudolph Pund that he should bear off such a prize? Who, the question resolves, is he?

Problems of that nature, wherein Dame Society decrees that mere man shall be submerged, are difficult at solution.

Henry Rudolph Pund, however, has won such fame on his own account that he stands out even through the tangle of names. He is the son of a prominent center and all-American, he has gone down in the gridiron history of Georgia Tech, the south, and the nation as one of the great football players of the present era. Liberty Magazine some time ago went so far as to declare that Peter was the greatest center who had come to light during the past 10 years.

Not satisfied with his gridiron laurels, Pund, a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon social fraternity and prominent in the social life of the campus, went further to win high scholastic honors at Tech. He graduated in 1928.

Peter is an Augusta, Georgia, lad who has made good in the cities, several of them. At present he is employed by the Goodhue Fire and Rubber Company in Akron, Ohio.

Miss Broyles is an Atlanta girl, a graduate of North Avenue Presbyterian school and of St. Timothy's at Cantonville, Md. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Broyles.

The couple is to be married on October 1. A home in Akron near the family home is planned.

EIGHT BALLOONS ARE STILL IN AIR EXPLOSION FATAL TO 3 IN JERSEY

Seven Rudderless Craft Come to Ground in Arkansas During Day.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 5.—(P)—Eight of the 15 balloons which left Houston, Texas, yesterday in the national elimination balloon race, apparently were still in the air over Arkansas and eastern Oklahoma late tonight.

Two of the Detroit entries made safe landings in southwest Arkansas this afternoon, while the No. 3 army balloon landed tonight at Danville, 95 miles west of here.

Eight balloons were reported seen over Mt. Ida, Ark., late tonight but none of these was believed to have been the No. 3 army balloon which subsequently landed at Danville.

The City of Houston, piloted by Lieutenant Otto Weinecke, passed over Broken Bow, Okla., at 4:55 p. m. The Detroit Air Craft balloon landed at 2 p. m. on the bank of the Red river, 11 miles north of Texarkana, Pilot W. A. Kilgoff reported.

The Kelvinton of Detroit came down near Horatio, Ark. Horatio is approximately 40 miles north of Little Rock, where the other Detroit balloon landed.

A fifth was down at Danville, 95 miles west of Little Rock, and the sixth was down at Egger, in Polk county, 150 miles west of Little Rock, about Broken Bow, Okla., at 4:55 p. m. From Mt. Ida, 100 miles west by south from here, eight of the balloons were reported sighted tonight, while the ninth was believed still in the air north of Broken Bow, Okla., where it was last reported late this afternoon.

The Aero Digest of New York and the navy Number 10 landed within a half mile of each other late today about 75 miles north of Texarkana, at Daisier, Ark.

ADMINISTRATION WILL USE FORCE FOR PACT QUORUM

Police Power of Sergeant-at-Arms To Be Employed To Compel Senators To Attend Session.

BY LYLE C. WILSON, United News Staff Correspondent. WASHINGTON, July 5.—(UN)—Administration leaders will resort to forceful collection of a senate quorum if necessary to obtain a vote on the London naval treaty, it was revealed today as senators scattered for a week-end rest before the special treaty session convenes Monday.

Majority Leader Watson revealed the plan to assure a quorum, explaining he did not believe it would be necessary to carry it through. But if treaty consideration is prolonged to a point where senators begin to leave Washington, Watson said the sergeant-at-arms would be instructed to pursue them to their homes and return them to the capitol.

Johnson Asks Rejection.
This extreme use of police power has never been invoked, although officials of the senate frequently went scurrying through Washington to round up absentees.

Senator Johnson, republican, California, tonight reiterated his plea for rejection of the London naval treaty. Johnson said the treaty was a guise of fictitious naval limitation to start the United States off an international adventure which would end "in the same old internationalist cry to take us into the League of Nations."

President Hoover will bring his completed treaty message to Washington on his return from the Rapidan camp. The plan is to force a treaty vote in a week or 10 days. Treaty opponents hope to delay consideration until the senate lacks a quorum or is willing to vote for a recess. Time is the most important factor in the treaty's fate.

Hoover Message at Noon.
Mr. Hoover's message asking ratification will be read to the senate a few minutes after noon Monday. At any favorable opportunity the treaty foes, led by republicans, will propose a recess. The administration is confident of its ability to check that strategy but it is conceded ratification will be jeopardized if consideration is protracted beyond ten days.

Party lines have been disregarded in the treaty fight. Five republicans are foremost in the forces opposing the administration—Johnson, Alders, New Hampshire; Robinson, Indiana; Hale, Maine, and Odell, Nevada. Democratic opponents include Broussard, Louisiana; Copeland, New York; and McKellar, Tennessee. Senator Shipstead, farmer-labor, Minnesota, is basing his opposition to the treaty upon President Hoover's refusal to provide the senate with copies of all dispatches exchanged with London and Tokyo during the months of preliminary negotiation.

Borah Will Not Lead.
Chairman Borah, of the foreign relations committee, has undertaken to vote for the treaty but will not lead Mr. Hoover's fight in its behalf. That responsibility will be shared by democrats and republicans with Senator Swanson, Virginia, ranking minority member of the committee presenting the treaty to the senate. Borah was out of sympathy with the treaty project from the first because he believed that the first move toward solution of naval problems should have been an attempt to codify maritime law in a manner which would have defined the rights of neutrals in time of war.

Mr. Hoover summoned the special session over the protest of Majority Leader Watson when it became apparent no vote could be had during regular session. To please that senators were tired and had important political commitments at home in an election year, Mr. Hoover replied it was essential to dispose of the treaty quickly.

20-Year-Old Lover Slays Girl and Self

TRENTON, N. J., July 5.—(P)—A tragic curtain fell on the romance of two 20-year-olds today when Ernest Fricke, of New York, shot and killed Gladys Cann, and ended his own life as their automobile neared the girl's home in Little Rock, N. J.

Refusal of the girl to marry him is believed to have driven Fricke to the crime.

William Queen, of New York, driver of the car, told the police that he and Fricke had called for the girl in New York to drive her home. There was no quarrel during the ride, but as they neared home, Queen said, Fricke drew a pistol and fired two shots through the girl's head. Then he turned the gun on himself. Both died in a few minutes.

A note from Fricke to the girl's father was found in the car, but the father refused to accept it. Other members of the family, who refused to divulge its contents, destroyed it.

Earthquake.
WELLINGTON, New Zealand, July 5.—(P)—A sharp and fairly prolonged earthquake was felt here and at Christ church at 4:30 p. m. today. No damage was reported.

REFUSAL TO QUIT BRINGS SITUATION UNIQUE IN PARTY

Chairman, Knowing President Wishes His Retirement, Will Hold Post Until President Fires Him.

CLOSE FRIENDSHIP PREVENTS THIS Matter Is Fast Approaching Crisis as Congressional Campaigns Are Beginning.

ORANGE, Va., July 5.—(UN)—Several republican senate leaders were summoned to President Hoover's Rapidan camp near here today for week-end conferences regarding the political situation created by the refusal of Claudius H. Huston to retire as chairman of the republican national committee.

The party has not encountered such a situation within memory of this generation. Numerous republican leaders are anxious to displace Huston. The congressional campaign is on and many democratic candidates are known to feel that they have an easy target, so long as a man who is charged with temporarily using for his stock market margin account funds advanced for Muscle Shoals lobbying heads the republican national political machinery.

President Hoover, long a personal friend and associate of Huston, is reported privately as anxious to see Huston replaced but he has made no direct move to this end. Huston has indicated he would not resign unless directly asked by the president.

Senator Fess, republican, Ohio, mentioned in some speculation as a possible successor to Huston, arrived at the Hoover camp today.

Fess was followed shortly afterward by Senator McNary, republican, Oregon, assistant floor leader. Floor Leader Watson and Senator Walcott, republican, Connecticut, an intimate friend, were expected to arrive early tomorrow morning.

Indications that the situation is rapidly approaching a crisis developed over the week-end. Huston postponed from Monday until next Thursday a meeting of officers of the republican national committee and heads of the house and senate campaign committees. He indicated the meeting is to consider summer campaign plans.

However, it is expected his party associates will consider ways of meeting the situation caused by Huston's refusal to resign. Many of the president's friends believe he should take the situation in hand and publicly insist upon Huston's retirement.

The president and Mr. Hoover spent a quiet July 4th week-end in the cool mountain air. Mr. Hoover worked on the special message to be sent to the senate when it meets Monday noon to take up the London naval treaty. The Virginia trout season ended July 1 and Mr. Hoover contented himself with a long horseback ride over mountain trails today. Mr. Hoover is recuperating from the after-effects of a fall in the White House some weeks ago. The president expects to return to Washington Sunday evening.

Cuba Pays American $350,000 Damages

HAVANA, July 5.—(P)—Prompt settlement of the claim of Charles H. Harrah against the Cuban government, arbitrated Thursday for $350,000, was recorded here today when Ambassador Harry Guggenheim placed in the mail a check for that amount handed him by the Cuban state department.

Harrah's case was based on the contention that a narrow-gauge railway which he had owned at Marianao was destroyed by private interests. His original claim was for $2,000,000, but this sum was reduced two-thirds during the first meeting of Cuban and United States arbitrators and later further reduced. Ambassador Guggenheim mailed the check to the United States department of state, and after arbitration expenses are deducted, Mr. Harrah, who is now in Havana, will be paid.

17 Carolinians Face Charge of Lynching

WALHALL, S. C., July 5.—(P)—Seventeen men, including Mayor Robert Lee Ballentine and Night Police-man Alvin Jones, alleged to have been members of the mob that lynched Al Green, negro, after seriously injuring Sheriff John Thomas, will go on trial here Monday.

The men, who were indicted at a special term of court here on May 26, are charged with murder, assault and battery with intent to kill, robbery and conspiracy to rescue prisoners.

GRADUATE PROGRAMS and NEWS

YOUNG SINGERS PLAN FOR ANNUAL TRYOUTS

National Auditions Start in Atlanta in September. Kane 1929 Winner.

Is there a Mary Garden or a John McCormack hidden among the young singers of the fifth district of Georgia? This is the question to which Mrs. J. M. Lennard, fifth district Georgia chairman for the fourth national radio audition of the Atwater Kent Foundation, is seeking an answer.

All through the country, in more than a thousand communities, active search is going on for young, non-professional singers, between the ages of 18 and 25 years, who may compete for the aggregate awards of $25,000 in cash and ten scholarships in recognized conservatories of music of their own selection. There is no special condition attached to the competition save that the young people shall not be professionals in any sense. The purpose is to find young singers.

In the past three years in the national radio auditions of 1927, 1928 and 1929 more than 150,000 young people competed and the 30 young men and women who became national finalists in those years—all of them absolutely unknown before the auditions—are now well on the road to success and prosperity.

Kane Won in 1929.

Last year Atlanta, the fifth district, Georgia and the entire south manifested the keenest interest in the success of the young man contestant from this city who sang his way into the hearts of the people and of the judges, from the Fulton County preliminary to the national finals, in which he received not only highest praise and adulation but the more substantial and lasting $5,000 first award, with a two-year scholarship or its equivalent. Edward Kane has wonderful material for these auditions, and it is believed that there are other young singers in this district who should be able to repeat Mr. Kane's performance of last year; that their ambitions should be encouraged in every way possible and that they should be urged to participate in the 1930 auditions.

Mrs. Wilmer L. Moore, state chairman, has divided the state into 12 congressional districts, as was previously, with a chairman for each district; the district contests will be held prior to September 15, and state finals in October. The national district auditions will follow in November and national finals in December. Only one young man and one young woman will pass from each audition until the national finals are reached, in which there will be five young men and five young women, each to receive an award as follows:

$5,000 First Prize.
Winners of first place (one boy and one girl) $5,000 each and two years' tuition in an American conservatory; winners of second place, $3,000 each and one year's tuition; winners of third place, $2,000 each and one year's tuition; winners of fourth place, $1,500 each and one year's tuition; winners of fifth place, $1,000 each and one year's tuition.

It is the present plan to hold the district auditions by counties, there being five counties in this district: Fulton, DeKalb, Campbell, Douglas and Rockdale. An effort will be made to secure a chairman for each county, and all contestants should enter and compete from their respective counties; in fact, they will be compelled to if they wish to compete in the district finals; from which a young man and woman will pass to the state finals.

After the state finals all expenses of participants in the contest will be borne by the Atwater Kent Foundation. The two state winners will be taken to a national district contest and placed in competition with the winners from the other states in the district; from among them two district champions will be chosen, similar eliminations being held in four other national districts, and the ten contestants from these national districts will be taken, by way of Washington, D. C., to New York, where the national finals will be broadcast through a coast-to-coast network for final rating by a board of distinguished musicians; all expense of railroad fares, hotel, entertainment, etc., being paid by the foundation.

All May Enter.
Every ambitious singer in this district who has passed his or her eighteenth birthday or will have passed it by November 1, 1930, but who will not have passed his or her twenty-third birthday before that date, may send for an application blank and begin preparation for the county preliminary contests to be held between September 1, 1930, and 15. Application blanks may be procured by telephoning or writing Mrs. J. M. Lennard, 720 Church Street, Decatur, telephone Dearborn 4432-W. Contestants should prepare four vocal selections from which two numbers will be chosen at the time of the holding of the preliminary contests, provided the list of contestants is not too large; as it is desired to give the contestants every opportunity to demonstrate the quality and potentiality of their voices.

Mrs. Mabel Daniel, of Decatur, singer of prominence, has again consented to act as DeKalb county chairman and anyone wishing to confer with her may address her at 218 West College avenue or telephone Dearborn 3530.

Receiver Tuning Process Advances

Practically everyone knows what is meant by tuning a receiver. Although the process is sometimes dignified by the name of "station selection," the former is a very appropriate phrase. When Marconi was first experimenting with wireless early in the present century, his sets radiated waves that were very broad. It would have been impossible to have a great number of broadcasting stations and to select any desired one under that situation. By adjusting the sending and receiving apparatus to "frequency" Lodge converted the wireless transmitting stations into something like a tuning fork that sends out waves of one note only. The receiving stations could be tuned to that "note" and exclude the signals from stations using other "notes."

As time went on and radio broadcasting became popular, refinements were made for improving the tuning process by stabilizing the frequency of the transmitting station—generally through crystal control—to the assigned frequency.

Up to the present time, however, uniformly sharp tuning over the entire dial has not been afforded by home broadcast receivers. Now new

New General Motors Announced

The Queen Anne radio-phonograph in the new General Motors radio line. This is a model of the period noted for the introduction of the cabriolet leg.

General Motors radio, a newcomer in the field, is being introduced to a public which has become discriminate in its receivers not only from a performance standpoint but from beauty of the housing of this entertainment necessity in every home. And in cabinet design as well as utility as a radio receiver, the new line in period design is claimed on its way to radio history.

"Outstanding value" is the slogan of General Motors radio. These new instruments provide everything that modern science has contributed to the perfection of radio performance, the announcements read, "and in addition give their owners positive matter of tone through the new 'tone selector.'"

By the simple turn of a knob the tone selector dictates the amount of bass or treble the listener prefers, the operator of the receiver actually conducting his own concert.

The station-indicator is completely visible at all times in the new set. There are four knobs, the tone selector, the power switch, the station selector and the volume control. The interior workings, for the most part never seen by the owner, are of the best in scientific radio design, the manufacturers assert. Eight tubes are used in a tuned radio frequency circuit. Three screen grid tubes are incorporated.

A mythical drama for children entitled "The Land of Make Believe," written for radio presentation by Yolande Langworthy, author of the "Arabesque" series, will be broadcast by WGST and CBS at 8 this morning. The cast includes both children and adults.

The "Sanctus" from the "Messe Solenne" by Gounod will be sung by Stanley Maxted, tenor, accompanied by the choir and orchestra of the Cathedral house, under the direction of Channon Collette this afternoon at 2:30 over WGST and the CBS. Other featured soloists will appear.

Interesting news is that Master Charles Sale, Jr., just 14, has been asked to take a part in a children's radio program in New York city. Young Sale is perhaps better identified as the son of Charles "Chic" Sale, the eminent rural comedian who appears every Sunday opening in the Liberty Theatre. Young Sale's radio programs sponsored by Penzance over WGST and the CBS at 6:45 o'clock. Indeed, it was on a visit of curiosity to the studio to watch his father rehearse that young Sale was drawn into the work.

The young man was having a rather hilarious time with the Columbia Broadcasting System's noise machine, which is responsible for the many sound effects necessary to a radio production, and was asking a great many questions about it, when he was approached by the director of the children's program. Indications are that he will accept. "Chic" himself is quite pleased with the prospect of his son following in his footsteps and looks for great things from the lad.

During July and August the majestic hour will present the National High school orchestra of 250 players and the National High school band of 150 players, composing the world's largest instrumental group. The programs will come from the organization's summer camp at Interlochen, Mich., will be relayed by way of station WABC, New York, and will be relayed from there over the Columbia Broadcasting network every Sunday at 7 p. m., beginning tonight. The program will feature masterpieces of musical literature, soloists of international reputation and lighter selections by the band. Guest conductors during the summer will include Henri Verbrugge, conductor of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra; Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music; John Philip Sousa, Carl Busch, Edgar Stillman Kelley and many other distinguished musicians.

YOUNG WGST ARTIST WINS STATE CONTEST

JAMES DE LA PUENTE.

James de la Puente, Atlanta boy violinist and staff artist of WGST, Saturday was announced as the winner of the Georgia division in the nationwide Grigsby-Grunow radio contest held during national music week. De la Puente was awarded first prize for the state of Georgia for the most outstanding and ingenious contribution to the national music week.

J. C. Montgomery, sales promotion manager for the Capital Electric Company, local distributors for the Grigsby-Grunow radio sets, sponsors of the local contest, has presented young de la Puente with the first prize for winners in each state a handsome radio electric phonograph combination. The Grigsby-Grunow Company of Chicago distributed $12,000 worth of these sets to state winners in the contest.

The purpose of the contest, it was announced, was to "encourage more discrimination by radio audiences" in their selection of music and it was said that the 1936 annual observance of national music week over the radio was one of the most successful demonstrations in the history of the movement.

Young de la Puente has won widespread recognition and popularity for his artistry in the music world, being a favorite on programs of civic organizations as well as over the microphone. He is a regular staff studio artist of WGST and is recognized as the youngest violin master in the entire south. He is a graduate of the Atlanta Conservatory of Music.

Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, speaking over WSB and the NBC in the National Sunday forum, will praise "America's Aristocracy," the people of America, in a summary of his address which will be heard at 2 o'clock this afternoon. The National Sunday forum is sponsored by the NBC and the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

In a time like this when many public officials are charged with corruption throughout the country," says Dr. Sockman, "it is easy for citizens to grow cynical about civic virtue. Such cynicism must be checked, for it is most unhealthy. It should be seen that America has been singularly fortunate in the character of her public men. Scandal has seldom scaled the heights of our chief offices. In the land of amazingly growing fortunes our presidents and chief political figures have retained a refreshing simplicity of life."

The opening number is Nicola's overture to the "Merry Wives of Windsor." In this opening to the celebrated comic opera based on Shakespeare's play the jolly pranks of the merry wives are amusingly portrayed. A vivid number on this program is Brahms' "Hungarian Dance No. 5," one of the most famous of gypsy dances. This number is often played by the ensemble, a multiple stringed percussion instrument characteristic of Hungarian Gypsy orchestras.

Other lovely selections are the "Moment Musical" of Schubert, "Farandole" from Bizet's suite "L'Arlesienne."

The complete program follows:

Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicola.

Variations on the "Austrian Hymn," Haydn.

"Hungarian Dance No. 5, Brahms.

SEALED FOR REDEMPTION—Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption.—Eph. 4:30.

PRAYER—"Consecrate me now to Thy service, Lord."

WHY WAIT?—WHY NOT NOW?

The unnecessary stigma under which Atlanta is resting as a result of the complete stoppage of work on the Stone Mountain Memorial is emphasized by news reports telling of the unveiling of the first unit of the great Mount Rushmore memorial in the Black Hills of North Dakota.

This colossal head of George Washington, carved by Gutzon Borglum under the direction of a federal commission in charge of the project, makes the memorial "a success without the necessity of the completion of the figures of the three other presidents," according to Doane Robinson, who first proposed the undertaking.

Granting all the claims made against Gutzon Borglum as to temperament, lack of attention and extravagance, it shows that under proper direction and co-operation this world-wide known sculptor can go about the work at hand—and, if given time and proper support,
complete it.

The troubles of the Stone Mountain memorial are so much water now over the mill dam, and should be relegated to the past for good and all, but the public cannot forget that the Mount Rushmore memorial, started years after the Stone Mountain memorial, has a completed unit, while the great conception in honor of the soldiers of the Confederacy has been allowed to lapse into a state of complete neglect.

There is no valid reason for longer delaying the resumption of work at Stone Mountain. The present association has frankly admitted its inability to complete the memorial. The Venable family have expressed their belief that with the association out of the way, Borglum can be returned to successfully go forward with the work. Sculptor Lukeman has stated that it would not be possible to complete the central group within the time left in the contract between the association and the Venable family.

Why wait, then, to turn the work over to Borglum?
The whole world has evidenced its interest in the great conception of the memorial.

If Borglum had been properly handled while on the work the memorial would have been completed by now.

There should be no cause for rancor or bitterness in bringing him back now—instead of waiting for Mr. Venable to do it later.

Significant of the public attitude toward the situation are the following excerpts from a recent editorial in The Lithonia Journal, a DeKalb county paper, published in the very shadow of Stone Mountain:

"The present contract of the Stone Mountain Memorial Association is now near its completion. One and all agree that the memorial should be carried forward to a successful completion and this can only be done successfully if the existing feeling of antagonism is forgotten and has become a thing of the past and dissen-sionary factions are united in one great common consensus of opinion which will mean the completion of the memorial."

It is the desire of this newspaper to see every obstacle affecting the completion of this memorial removed and all of the people united on this most important question. And with this end in view this paper stands now, as in the past, ready to give all possible assistance in any and every way in bringing about a fruition of plans which will make the memorial certain in time to come.

The present Stone Mountain Memorial Association has collapsed and, as we see the situation, there is no probability of hardly any possibility that they will be able to complete the projected memorial. Therefore we are urging the united support of every newspaper in the state and in the southland to agree not to continue to fan the fires which will keep alive this existing spirit of antagonism which continues to crop out occasionally here and there. Let us look to the future and endeavor to formulate some plan whereby and in which everyone can and will lend a helping hand in putting this proposition over as it should be and make it a lasting memorial to the southland and more particularly to DeKalb county."

This expresses the situation!
The Memorial Association, as now constituted, has admitted its failure and abandoned the work.

Under its contract with the Venables it has less than a year in which to complete the memorial, and if it does not do so in that time the mountain, steeply reverts to the donors, who frankly state that at that time they will bring Borglum back and proceed to the completion of the memorial.

Why wait?
Why not now?

BOTH NEEDED!

In another column appears a communication from V. O. Rankin, prominent resident of North Atlanta, but interested in the development of the city as a whole, in which he stresses the importance of the proposed new southeastern boulevard.

The suggestion of this new boulevard comes of the necessity of relieving the traffic jams which handicap the residents of the extensive fan-shaped territory occupied by West End and its environs, in traffic to and from the city.

As shown by Mr. Rankin, the proposed new traffic artery, because of its arterial approach to undeveloped first ward territory, is undoubtedly of city-wide importance.

The same can be said of the other proposed traffic artery, running through the second ward and reaching the center of the city through Central avenue, thus creating a much needed relief artery of traffic.

Both of these boulevards are needed, and their adherents should actively co-operate to secure both, rather than to regard one as conflicting with the other.

The southeastern boulevard, starting at the junction of Lee and Oak streets and proceeding to Hunter street at the Terminal station, is needed to care for the traffic of that side of West End, while the southeast boulevard, running from Gordon street through the section in which are located the capitol, city hall and court house, could serve as good a purpose for the southern part of West End.

Since, therefore, the two proposed boulevards would serve two distinct parts of the section for which relief is asked and would approach the heart of the city from two entirely different directions, the only sensible attitude on the part of the Second Ward Club and the Little Tammany organization will be one of co-operation instead of an-tagonism.

By working together both boulevards may be secured, while lack of co-operation may result in failure to obtain either.

NO ROOM FOR REMISM.

An eastern journal remarks that "southern states generally do not take kindly to the doctrine so generally preached in the north that it is within the right of 'free speech' to advocate and promote the cause of violent overthrow of the American government."

That is a correct statement of the feeling that prevails in the south. Here our people have no tolerance for the claim of communist agents that they are only proposing what the southern people attempted to accomplish in the War Between the States in 1861-65.
Nothing could be further from the truth.

The southern people in that struggle were seeking better and safer constitutional self-government.
Their aims were further from and higher than communism as imagination can picture. And today there is no spirit in the southern people that responds to the atheism, grievousness and animosity of the soviet scheme of society and public administration.

All loyal Americans stand foursquare for free speech, free press and free conscience, subject only to the restraints of decency, loyalty and morality; but when any one of those liberties are exaggerated into licenses to overthrow major order government, degrade social order and punish religious faith and practices, the people will assert their sovereign right of defensive protection.

The freedoms of speech, press and religion are justly safeguarded

by the national and state constitutions, but none of them guarantee either domestic or alien invasions of the accepted orders of government, social purity or religious liberty.

Hence, with those principles imbedded in the public polity of Americanism, it is rational and necessary that all organized forms of "red revolution," of domestic insurrection and pagan atheism should be suppressed for the common good.
It must become intolerable shortly that communism should be propagated among the people as it is that polygamy, free love and lawlessness shall be allowed free reign and immunity from prosecution and penalties.

LUMBER-GROWING URGED.

Large land owners in Georgia who can neither use nor rent their land profitably, and who must let it lie idle and pay taxes upon it, should wake up to the fact that such losing conditions will continue and grow worse with the advancing years.

Inescapable economic necessities are sure to force even unwilling people to change their views and habits of Georgia farming. The state is trending to fewer farmers who will do intensive diversified farming on fewer acres of proved and improved land, whether owned, rented, or cropped. Old foggy farmers will cry out lustily and stubbornly against the increasing change, but they cannot stop it. God and Mother Necessity have ordained that it shall come to pass. The change may be aggravating to the old crowd, but will be immensely healthful and profitable to a new generation.

The way of salvation for those holders of non-profit-bearing lands is in forestation for the production of future lumber crops. Within the years necessary to mature such timber crops the demand for them will grow annually larger and the prices for lumber be found surely profitable. The forestry and commercial experts of the country are all agreed that unprofitable agricultural land, especially in the south, and notably in Georgia, can be turned to lumber culture with every guarantee that they will in due time become the greatest profit-bearing lands of the region. The timber-culture problem is one for large land owners and not for small farmers. It is worthy of early and earnest consideration.

What do Mr. Loesch, or the Association for the Advancement of Colored People, or any other critic, mean when they assert that the 14th and 15th amendments of the constitution are treated in the south as mere scraps of paper, without respect or force, and are flagrantly and consistently nullified by the southern states in which they were designed especially to operate?

The Constitution has repeatedly challenged such statements by northern journals, writers and politicians. It has demanded the specific proofs of such charges and been answered with dense silence.
It has, on the other hand, proved beyond contradiction that every southern state is giving full force to those malignant war-bred amendments, in every respect of their interpretations by the supreme court of the nation.

Again The Constitution denounces those falsifications of the facts and of the conduct of the southern states in the matter of giving validity to those amendments as congress, the supreme court, and the federal constitution present them. What The Constitution has demonstrated to be the truth concerning them has been more than once printed in the "Congressional Record" and no man in the congress has had the audacity to deny the showing and reply in refutation of it.

Then what motive may we justly assign to those outside of official character who continue to make these false indictments of our people?

COVERING UP THE PANIC.

It is given out flatly from the White House that President Hoover has issued to his party leaders in congress his flat against any investigation of the frightful and disastrous New York stock market collapse last fall. The determining reasons for keeping the causes of that fateful panic in the dark, and the forces that manipulated it to their enormous profit under cover, while the millions of victims still wonder "how it happened," can only be conjectured.

President Hoover's action is distinctly contrary to the conduct of his predecessors in similar circumstances. Even stolid President Grant, when Wall Street panics—
"Black Friday," six months after his first inauguration, and the banks panic, six months after his second inauguration—afflicted his administrations, tried to explain them satisfyingly to the people. President Arthur openly disclaimed any administrative responsibility for the May panic of 1884 when the Marine bank and Jim Keene blew the stock market to pieces. And when the famous "silent panic" of 1907 hit a solar plexus blow on President Roosevelt he promptly investigated and fixed the responsibility elsewhere than on his administration.

In the light of those historic incidents there will be a very natural wonder over the anxiety of President Hoover not to have the stock market orgy and calamity of last fall investigated and the facts uncovered to the public eye.

Since Mussolini became active in Italy Vesuvius has ceased to spout.
She evidently knows when she is out-classed.

That soviet dictator, Stalin, wants the world to understand that he is not Stalin when he figures to com-munistize all its governments.

The young negro boys who are idle between the closing of the peach season and the beginning of cotton picking. In brief, he seeks to open the minds, train the hands, care for the physical welfare and build the character of his pupils—"his people."

Negro leaders of this type have always had the sympathy, endorsement and co-operation of the white people of the south. Booker Washington found this true, and so did John H. Lewis, the widely-known negro educator who was born in America. Ga. Professor Lewis was for eight years president of the Morris Brown college in Atlanta and is now head of the Paul Laurence Dunbar school in Arkansas. It was just about the time the Spingarn medal was awarded to Professor Hunt that Professor Lewis was honored by an invitation to address the Rotary Club of Little Rock on the work he is doing for negro youths.
He is the first of his race ever to speak to a southern Rotary club, and his presence was due to the recognition of his work by the leaders of Little Rock.

Men like Hunt and Lewis achieve success for two reasons: First, they have understood the limitations and needs of their own race; second, they are aware that southerners are not only willing but eager to encourage any negro who attempts to make the members of his race better citizens and trained, dependable workers in appropriate fields of endeavor.

A PHENIX FALSEHOOD.

When Frank Loesch, of the Hoover law enforcement commission, talks of the danger that the 15th amendment may eventually fall into a like innocuous desuetude as the 14th and 15th amendments, he prates in echoes of ignorance or designed misrepresentation.

This is a big country and is now
so well filled up with aggressive people and their vital interests as to make American politics far more complex than the same profound concern would become. There are no more frontiers, no more physical territorial pioneers. The west is no longer a virgin land to be conquered, it is no longer a "subject people." Each of them, like the east and north, now stands up equal footed to fight for its full share of national attention.

The two big parties, republican and democrat, persist because it is healthy for the nation to have big parties which are not only rivals but are contesting for government control.

But as between them there are few significantly contrasting principles. The main thing they fight over are not fundamentals, but are policies of convenience, expediency and promissory of common interests in which both parties are equally concerned.

Congress is now popularly elected in both houses and that makes strongly against conservative party action, no matter which party is in full control.
Congressmen, senators and representatives alike, now act for their local backers rather than for the larger interests of national welfare.

What Think You of Hoover?

Almost the first question asked of every one of consequence who has gone to Washington in recent months is—

"What do you think of Hoover?"
Senators, representatives and government officials all ask that question. They want to learn what the people back home are saying about the president and what, if anything, they expect from his administration.

Thus far they have been getting bad mixed answers. Some reports say the people have lost their confidence in his ability to perform up to the expectations that built up his great popularity and majority in the 1928 election.

Others say that the people believe he would make a great and helpful president if congress would only back him up and enact his policies.

Where Democratic Hopes Hinge.
It is in this division of sentiments regarding Hoover that the democratic leaders are brightening hopes that the fall elections will give them congressional majorities. With them they expect Hoover to stop putting over anything they would not wish, and take democratic credit for enacting anything in his policies that really benefits the country.

In doing that they would also benefit the party and make fairly sure the election of a democratic president in 1932.

In the meanwhile there is no question in Washington responsible circles that many of his own party leaders are unfriendly to Hoover and do not intend to blow hard on his fires and help him to a re-nomination in 1932.

Rise or Fall With the Tariff.
The present feeling of congressmen, as they disperse to enter their campaigns for re-election, is that both the party and the president are slated for a rise or fall with the effects of the Grundy tariff bill.

If it shall happen between now and September, when campaigns become active, that business fails to rapidly repopulate, employment to greatly increase, prices of farm products to continue down and the cost of living to come down for the consumers in general, the republicans are due to take the biggest beating of their lives.

But if the country is in a big boom in October they will hold fast to what they have got.

The Background of Foreign Affairs

Revolution in the Tin Mountains; Dominicans Abroad; Silver Troubles in Mexico; Russia in Grip of Steel.

BY HENRY KITTREDGE NORTON.

Bolivia digs from its mountains about half the world's supply of tin.
Tin is to Bolivia what sugar is to Cuba or nitrate is to Chile. When the price of tin falls there is liable to be trouble in the Bolivian mountains.
And the price of tin has been falling.

Early in 1926, after one of Bolivia's innumerable revolutions, Hernando Siles was "elected" president.
Bolton Siles was his running mate.
But they did not run together very long. Siles had his own idea about how the country should be managed, especially in the matter of the budget, which according to the constitution did not need to balance. Saavedra protested and promptly found himself in exile. That was in 1928.

A few weeks ago President Siles resigned, and Senor Urechueta took his place. He placed the government in the hands of his own cabinet, and according to his opponents, instructed them to amend the constitution so that Siles be re-elected and then arrange for said re-election.

Saavedra, from his haven in Buenos Aires, immediately got into action. If Siles had resigned he, as vice president, would have succeeded to the presidency. He notified the cabinet that its rule was unconstitutional and demanded to be recognized as the legal ruler of the country. The cabinet replied that it had more important matters on its hands.

And it had. There were two or three revolutions and a mutinous army already in the Tin Mountains. But if Siles were to be re-elected, the cabinet and the army and the revolutionaries would take possession of the capital, installing a junta or council with himself at the head as the government of the country.

It is now reported that the country is almost unanimously behind the new regime and that La Paz is in fesive spirit over the downfall of Siles.
It appears, however, that considerable work with machine guns was necessary to secure the unanimity. And part of the festivities consisted in burning President Siles' grand piano in front of the legation in which he had temporarily established his residence. And the price of tin has not gone up a cent.

The Dominican republic, like its big sister to the south, appears to be altogether content. The bloodless revolution of a few months ago was hailed as a new departure in Caribbean political technique. General Trujillo started a rumour, but before it reached the shooting stage the American legation stepped in and arranged a truce between the general and President Vasquez, whom he wished to drive from office.

It was agreed that Vasquez should resign, that Senor Urechueta should be provisional president, that an election —a perfectly free election—should be held. This procedure was followed—Vasquez resigned, Urechueta was elected and a new departure in Caribbean political technique was achieved.

But Vasquez felt that things were not going as they should and a few days before election withdrew from the race and ordered his followers to keep away from the polls. They did so. But, nevertheless, Trujillo was elected president and Urechueta vice president by more votes than there were voters.

Immediately Vasquez was thrown into jail on a charge of revolution.
Then Trujillo tried a new tack. He offered his prisoner the post of minister of finance in his cabinet. But Vasquez would not consider it. He offered, while he was in jail, so they let him out. And now he is in San Juan, on our island of Porto Rico.
With him are Vasquez, the veteran president and a number of other leading protesters against the Trujillo-Urechueta regime.

The situation is discouraging for them. Like all good Dominicans, he does not desire the return of the American marines nor any other interference by the United States. At the same time there is little hope of throwing out Trujillo without American aid of some kind, such as a revolutionary army or a revolution.
There might be a revolution, but Trujillo is watching things very closely and it is hard to get weapons. And the United States does not like revolutionary governments.

Mexico, like China, has perhaps more than its share of troubles. Both of them at the present time are suffering from the drop in the price of silver. For both use silver as the basis of their currency and when the price goes down it means an added burden on their debts and to buy commodities abroad.

It is more than a currency question with Mexico—she is the world's largest producer of silver. The mining of this metal is the basic industry of the country and everything else rises and falls with it. The obvious course to overcome a silver surplus which is breaking the market is to reduce production. But if Mexico follows this course so many men would be thrown out of work that the result would be disastrous. So she is doing just the opposite and trying to make up her losses by producing more silver—and further lowering the price.

Now she proposes to call a silver congress and invite the world's silver producers and users (United States, Canada, China, India, Japan and France—to come to Mexico City and talk it over.

Meanwhile the situation appears to be having a sobering effect in Mexico.
General Calles, who has been in office since 1924, has been carrying on a policy of expropriating land, turning it over to the peons and issuing bonds to the former owners. This process entirely removed from the control of the treasury, and as there was no limitation on its activities, it was never checked. To balance the budget or to tell just how much Mexico owed or was going to owe.

President Calles allowed this to continue throughout his term of office.
Despite the dangers pointed out by Ambassador Morrow. Now, however, he has given out an interview in which he calls the expropriation policy a mistake and urges that no more land be taken in this way except where it can be paid for in cash.

While the Russian dictatorship is practically supreme, it is theoretically under the control of the annual congress of the communist party. This theoretical control sometimes produces real difficulties for the rulers of Russia. It is there in the party debates, behind closed doors, that the critics of the government and the opponents of the clique in power sometimes break forth into denunciatory orations and endeavor to capture the party and its policies for themselves.

When such an incident occurs there follows a test of strength between the "ins" and the "outs" which threatens, if further, to break down the iron discipline of the party. It was after such a test that Trotsky went into exile and that a number of other outstanding leaders have been forced to eat humble pie and make their peace with the Kremlin.

For in that old pile sits Joseph Stalin—the man of steel. Lenin warned the comrades against him, but despite their efforts this incarnated inferiority complex has built up a political machine against which all their strength has been in vain. Stalin has demonstrated in the present congress that he holds the communist party and Russia in the hollow of his hand. He can even go so far as to let his most potent enemies take the floor and depend upon them to eulogize his policies.

Perhaps there has never been a more striking exhibition of purely political power. Stalin appeals neither to the populace nor to the army. Yet without popularity or military support he rules one of the greatest nations of the earth. He is the living embodi-

The Only Muddle Is Politics.

The only muddle of national importance that one finds muddled in Washington is politics. Never in 50 years, in war or peace, has there been so much of confusion in the political world of Washington, both in and out of the congress.

This is a big country and is now
so well filled up with aggressive
people and their vital interests as to

Hoover's Legislative Feats Credited to House Support

Connecticut's Tilson Says Militant Representatives Have Enabled Program to Succeed.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—(AP)—Cooperation of the house with the administration was credited today by Representative Tilson, of Connecticut, the republican leader, with enabling the seventy-first congress to enact most of President Hoover's major legislative proposals.

In a statement through the republican national committee, Tilson reviewed 18 enactments sponsored by the chief executive, and said "A militant house of representatives, imbued with the will to cooperate with the administration, has enabled President Hoover to carry out a very comprehensive and far-reaching legislative program."

"Overcoming persistent efforts of senate democrats at obstruction, the republican majority in the house, with the aid of the republican leaders in the senate, made possible the translation into law of practically every major proposal put forward by the president," he said.

Tilson said the house had cooperated with the administration in preventing enactment of the export duty plan by the senate.

"Only on few occasions in recent years has it been necessary for the house to become such a bulwark of defense against ill-considered legislative efforts," he said. In addition, he said, the house by sustaining a veto prevented final enactment of unjust and discriminatory legislation affecting certain classes of World War veterans.

The Connecticut representative cited the accomplishments of congress in: revision of the federal farm board; the $100,000,000 tax reduction program; extension of the public buildings program; increasing federal highway aid; enacting a veterans' pension bill; settlement of the French, German and Austrian war debt agreements; transferring prohibition enforcement to the justice department and enacting a large rivers and harbors omnibus bill.

Among the other achievements noted were the extension of the federal power commission; creation of a permanent federal radio commission; appropriating funds for initial work on Boulder Canyon dam; providing for reappointment and the 1935 census; establishment of a bureau of narcotics; liberalizing the ocean mail contract laws and placing into effect government regulation of perishable food products.

Price of Commodities Moves Lower in June

NEW YORK, July 5.—The general downward trend of commodity prices which began in June, was foreshadowed a further decline according to Bradstreet's. The index number as of July 1 works out at 810.60, which is a decline of 1.9 per cent from June 1, of 15.3 per cent from July 1 a year ago, and as a small fraction of 1 per cent from that reported on June 1, 1934. Compared with the high point of all time on February 1, 1920, the decrease is 49.1 per cent, or about one half.

The July 1 index number, in fact, is the lowest recorded on the first of any month since November, 1915. Compared with the pre-war low of August 1, 1914, however, the index number this year shows an advance of 21.2 per cent.

Of 13 groups of commodities making up the index number, nine are lower, two are higher and one is unchanged. Groups of commodities advancing are coal and oil, with only a fractional gain being noted in wheat, hides and leather remaining steady, and breadstuffs, live stock, provisions, fruits, textiles, metals, naval stores, building materials, and miscellaneous products declined.

Compared with June 1 this year, 10 products advanced, 33 declined, and 37 remained unchanged.

The Bradstreet index numbers by groups of commodities at various dates were as follows:

	Feb. 1, 1934	June 1, 1934	July 1, 1934
Breadstuffs	829.25	830.00	830.00

the honors in the aerial derby, which were continued today in dedication of the Gainesville airport. Davis captured first place in the Atlanta-Gainesville race, while Blevins executed a beautiful "dead stick" landing to take first in that event.

But it was the terrapin derby, a novelty in this part of the country, that drew the crowd. It was estimated that nearly 5,000 people jammed the city of No. 497, entered by P. L. Anderson, a local racing enthusiast. The event was worth $150 to the winner.

The speed king of the north Georgia hills put on a neck-and-neck race on a "day-horse" entry up within a foot or two of the finish line, when the unknown went into reverse and gave No. 497 a clear track. The winner made the 30-foot dash in approximately five minutes, the timekeeper forgetting to stop his watch in the general excitement. Some of the terrapin backers were reported still out at the track Saturday waiting for their entrants to finish.

Miss Redwine named Queen. Baseball, music, parades and fireworks were the main features of the program, which culminated in the coronation ball at Riverside Military Academy, where Miss Katherine Redwine, of Gainesville, was crowned queen of the coronation.

Her active work as a member of the Grace Methodist church, she was a native of Ringgold.

Besides her daughter, with whom she made her home, she is survived by two sons, L. D. Rauschenberg and Fred Barr, both of Atlanta, and the following grandchildren: Harry M. Perkins, Jr., Mrs. S. C. Perkins, Jr., Jerry Perkins, Louis Perkins and L. D. Rauschenberg, Jr.

ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, JULY 6, 1930.

Interlachen Course Requires Accurate Wood Shots, Danforth Finds CRACKERS SEEK 'JUG HANDLE' MORRISON

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 5.—Ever since Bobby Jones returned from England experts have been slowly coming over to a strange way of thinking. They have been weighing chance remarks dropped by Bobby and by those who saw him win the British amateur and the open. They have reached startling conclusions.

It seems the general opinion now that Bobby won both those British events without playing his best golf. It seems that he never really was on his game; he was not hitting many shots well and had a real struggle to score as low as he did.

They are drawing the conclusion that if he was off form in two tournaments on the other side and still was good enough to win, he probably will "get hot" at Interlachen and win the United States open in a canter. The experts are reluctant to commit themselves to that platform in print but in private they express such beliefs.

Yet one wonders whether the very fact of having to wrestle with a baggy game and fight for everything he won did not exact a severe toll on Bobby's endurance. Perhaps the tussles he had overseas have left him in no mental shape for another wrestling match with par. You see golf experting is composed of two measures of hope and one of fear along with sag deductions.

It is futile to try to guess what Bobby will do until the end of the third round at least.

NIGHT FOOTBALL AGAIN.

Texas colleges are reported considering night football games. The heat out there in September and October is terrific. Ask any Vanderbilt football player who has been through one of those games with the University of Texas.

And lest we forget—the lighting system at Tech Flats is all ready to turn on.

The lights were not put in simply for night track meets and cadet reviews. One may hear any day that the Yellow Jackets will play a couple of their games at night.

SOUTHERN BOY MAKES GOOD OVERSEAS.

Jeff Dickson, the London promoter, who has been booking Young Stribling in London and Paris in recent months and who is staging the Stribling-Scott fight July 28, comes by his liking for the Striblings naturally.

Jeff came from Mississippi and still talks the part in spite of years of living in London. He is sold on W. L. as the next champion and intends to have first call on his services.

Jeff already has qualified as a promoter with a vision by bringing Primo Carnera, the most colorful fighter in the ring today, out of the obscurity of the spaghetti belt. He staged the two matches between Stribling and Carnera and thus introduced him to the public at large. If anybody can get Stribling a match in Europe with Schmeling, this southerner, Dickson, can.

OLD QUERY BOBS UP AGAIN.

Answering G. P. Dunn, Fort Pierce, Fla.—The long-est priced winner under the pari-mutuel system of wagering at race tracks was Wishing Ring, which won at Latonia, Ky., July 17, 1912, and paid 941 to 1.

"THEM AS HAS, GITS."

Pat Joyce, Chicago railroad man, had a horse in the Kentucky Derby called Dick O'Hara. Dick O'Hara, the longest shot in the race, finished absolutely last, a poor last to be exact. Mr. Joyce had a modest wager of $100 on Dick, they say, and laughed heartily at the colt's effort.

Mr. Joyce, however, looked around for the longest shot in the recent American Derby at Chicago and selected Reville Boy as a colt that must be about as bad as his own. He invested $100—and was rewarded with $5,650. His was the only $100 ticket sold.

It is perfectly safe to make investments like that if you have Mr. Joyce's luck. But I imagine there is only one Mr. Joyce.

THE LITTLE GRAND AMERICAN.

They call the southern divisional handicap trapshoot that will be held July 9-12 at the Atlanta Gun Club "the Little Grand American."

"And why not? There are $4,250 in prizes, a dozen silver trophies and the greatest shooters in America participating. Mark Arie and Frank Troch are a pair of kings that make any trapshoot a standout.

Then Mrs. Ad Topperwein, who broke 980x1000 in a single day and has had 117 runs of 100 straight targets in her long career at the traps, is a figure that adds great interest to any field.

STATE'S RIGHTS FOREVER!

A. H. Minter, an Atlantan, takes righteous exception to a smart crack I made about Arkansas the other day. I can appreciate the noble sentiment of state pride; I would have rised up had some sport writer taken a poke at old Kentucky.

The spirit of Arkansans is admirable. It is best illustrated by a story I once heard Strickland W. Gillilan tell. It seems that four traveling salesmen gathered in the smoker and settled down to talk a long journey.

Said one: "I come from Georgia, the greatest state in the Union."

Said another: "Well, I'm from Kentucky and I'm proud of it."

Said the third: "Boys, I'm from No'th Ca'lina, if you haven't already guessed it from the way I talk."

The fourth slowly drew a 45 from his pocket and laid it on the seat beside him: "I'm from Arkansas and I'll shoot the first man that laughs."

That spirit is unconquerable; it demands respect; I apologize for the slight.

Seligson, Bowman Enter Final Round

MONTECLAIR, N. J., July 5.—(AP)—Herbert L. Bowman, New York veteran, and Julius Seligson, Lehigh University star, today reached the final round of singles in the New Jersey State Tennis championships. They will meet for the title tomorrow.

Franklin Nicholas, Old Catcher, Dies

YORK, Pa., July 5.—(AP)—Franklin F. Nicholas, who in the '80s and early '90s was a well-known baseball catcher, died suddenly yesterday at his home in this city. Death was caused by paralysis. He was 68.

NATIONAL OPEN LINKS REQUIRE PERFECT DRIVES

Interlachen Course Offers Severe Test for 150 Golfers.

By Ed Danforth.

Constitution Sports Editor.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 5.—Picture-post and inviting to the eye, Interlachen Country Club offers a severe test of golf to the 150 who have qualified for the national open championship. Early arrivals found that out in practice rounds yesterday and will have the idea drilled into them today. By Thursday, when the 72-hole race begins, Interlachen will have lost its beauty for many. The trees and shrubs will be pillars and piles of funeral cypress and the tiny lakes pools of liquid rain.

Interlachen is 6,072 yards long on the card and par is the conventional 72. It is a way of speaking a typical American golf course, and it may be that Bobby Jones will find it admirably suited to his game. But, as for that matter, where is there a golf course, excluding the Tom Thumb layouts, that is not suited to Bobby's game, or vice versa.

The course begins and ends at the clubhouse in customary manner. A detailed description of the links might be read to get an idea of the battle ground over which Bobby Jones may win his third major championship of the year.

The first hole is a very hard par four—478 yards. Two well-hit wood shots are necessary to reach the green; few can use an iron second. Not every candidate will start his card with a 4.

PLENTY OF TROUBLE.

The tee shot on No. 2, another par 4 hole, 370 yards, must be played to the right of the fairway to afford a clear second shot. There is rough on the left and a mean bunker on the right. Great accuracy with the massive second is necessary, as the green is 1, and narrow and the hole is bunkered on both sides and left front.

The third hole is a fine one-shotter, 180 yards, that should be played with a fade to the right. There is not much trouble around the green.

NUMBER FIVE.

The fourth hole is a 506-yard par 5 affair, with the fairway falling away toward the left. A pulled tee shot will land in St. Paul. One shot must be hit to the left and away from a lake that is lying around loose. The green is on high ground and cannot be reached by a second shot—two full woods and a mashie niblick are the ticket.

A GOOD HOLE.

The fifth is a 178-yard one-shotter that is certain to cause grief. It should be played with a No. 3 iron and the ball must stick or nibble by a second severely trapped hole on the course. The lights and shadows of the trees make it difficult to estimate.

The sixth is a 343-yard affair, par four. The fairway is trapped on the right, and there is heavy rough on the left. The second shot must hit the green or one will wind up in very deep traps.

The seventh hole offers much the same problem. It is 352 yards for the par 4 and requires a well placed tee shot. Traps in front and to the right of the green again necessitate a delicate mashie niblick second shot.

They call number 9 one of the finest holes in the northwest. It is 485 yards, par 5. The two wood shots must be perfectly placed or the score will mount. The second shot is over a lake to a greened green. A birdie 4 here will require superlative golf. It will be a tough one to close out an outward journey for any of them.

The tenth is 344 yards, par 4. It calls for a shot straight as a string away from the tee and here at least the long hitter will be well repaid. A second shot drifting to the right or left finds traps 15 feet deep.

SPORTY AFFAIR.

The sportiest hole at Interlachen they say is number 11. It is 484 yards long, par 5. Many a fine score can be ruined by trying to take a short cut. The tee shot must be well placed to the right. It is possible but by no means easy to reach the green with a fine brassie second shot. Heavy rough and out of bounds makes the green dangerous to the bold player.

Number 12 is the long hole, 550 yards, par 5. The fairway is wide, but the largest lake of all is right and heavy rough on the left. The green is situated

BIG BILL TILDEN BEATS ALLISON FOR OLD TITLE

Veteran Player Regains Wimbledon Crown After Nine Years.

By Wallace R. Carroll.

WIMBLEDON, England, July 5. (UN)—Big Bill Tilden, the Philadelphia veteran who was playing championship tennis while his present-day rivals still were practicing with tennis balls against barn doors, today clinched the unprecedented American Wimbledon championships with a straight set victory over Wilmer Allison, of Austin, Texas, in the men's singles final. The scores were 6-3, 6-2, 6-4.

The victory gave Tilden, who has been "relegated" to the athletic scrap heap annually for the past five years, his third triumph in the Wimbledon singles—the highest honors the present tennis world has to offer. The 37-year-old Philadelphian previously won the Wimbledon championship in 1920 and 1921. Since then he has monopolized the United States championships, but until this year was unable again to reach the finals of the international tournament.

Tilden's triumph gave the United States its fourth championship in the 1930 tournament and assured the Americans of a clean sweep over the world's greatest court stars. Finals in the fifth class—men's doubles—will be played Monday, with Wilmer Allison and John Van Ryn, defending champions, playing the Davis cup teammates, George Lott and John Doe.

Results of the championship matches in the four classes already decided were:

MEN'S SINGLES: William Tilden, II, Philadelphia, defeated Wilmer Allison, Austin, Texas, 6-3, 6-2, 6-4.
Women's singles: Mrs. Helen Wills Moody, Berkeley, Cal., defeated Miss Elizabeth Ryan, California and London, 6-2, 6-2.
Women's doubles: Mrs. Helen Wills Moody and Miss Elizabeth Ryan defeated Miss S. Palfrey, Boston, and Miss Edith Cross, San Francisco, 6-2, 9-7.

Mixed Doubles: Miss Elizabeth Ryan and Jack Crawford, Jacksonville, defeated Franklin H. Krahwinkel and Dr. Daniel Prenz, Germany, 6-1, 6-3.

The American success has only one parallel since the Wimbledon championships became international. In 1925 France won the men's and women's singles, the men's doubles and the mixed doubles, and Suzanne Lenglen and Miss Ryan paired to win the women's doubles. However, the French were unable to defeat foreign competitors in the majority of their final matches, whereas this year the finals in four of the five classes were all-American contests.

Allison, who paved the way for Tilden's victory by eliminating the Philadelphia-born dangerous rival, Henri Cochet, of France—in the quarter-finals, played fine tennis and loomed as a worthy successor for which he outplayed Tilden, and which he took a heavy toll with lightning service aces and line clips to Allison's backhand which found the Texas youth out of reach.

The young American, who is on his honeymoon, was greeted with wholehearted applause when he made his occasional spurts, in which he outplayed Tilden, and was accorded an enthusiastic reception when he left the court after his defeat.

The match was played before a record crowd, which included a distinguished gathering in the royal box, King George, Queen Mary and Prince George arrived as Tilden and Allison took the court, and remained through the entire match. Other occupants of the royal box were Princess Helen Victoria, Princess Marie Louise, the former king and queen of Portugal, Marchesa De Merry Del Val, Miss Regina Oliveira and Lord and Lady D'Abernon.

ROYAL GATHERING.

The royal gathering also witnessed the women's doubles finals in which Mrs. Helen Wills Moody and Miss Elizabeth Ryan defeated Miss Sarah Palfrey and Miss Edith Cross, and after the match Mrs. Moody was presented to the king and queen at the reception room in the clubhouse.

The Mrs. Moody-Miss Ryan victory marked the tenth time that the latter, who now lives in London, has shared that title, and her later victory with Jack Crawford in the mixed doubles was her sixth in that competition. Mrs. Moody and Miss Ryan played

Veteran 'Comes Back'

"Big Bill" Tilden, the veteran of veterans, came back yesterday afternoon on the courts of Wimbledon and won the British championship with a straight set victory over his brilliant young rival, Wilmer Allison. It has been nine years since the old boy last held the championship.

Andy Messenger Hurls Great Game To Win, 1-0

Cracker Pitcher Gives Up Only Three Hits in Excellent Exhibition.

Andrew Messenger, the tall Texan, struck a gnarled right hand out to the Lookouts Saturday afternoon at Spiller field and said, "Boys, eat out of this." And they did, losing, 1 to 0.

They ate right out of that hand for nine full innings while "Raw Meat" Bill Rodgers raged in impotent fury on the coaching line as his team failed to overcome or tie the single run made by the Crackers in the first inning.

The 1 to 0 shutout of the Lookouts, one of the few white washings applied this season in the league, found the lively ball out on its summer vacation as Messenger and Art Decatur pitched masterful baseball.

Coming after the run-making orgy of the Mobile series the Crackers' battle of Saturday had the crowd shrieking hysterically all afternoon. They cheered each rise and fall of the tall Texan and he moved down the Lookouts.

Nine men struck out. Johnny Jones fouled three times to the catcher and Frank Walker started the final series of outs in the ninth with the same gesture. It caused the crowd great glee to see the two former Crackers retire to ignominiously to the scene.

HELPLESS!

Only five Lookouts got on base during the game. Three got base hits. One walked and another was there by virtue of an error. Only seven men hit balls to the outfield. It was quite a pity that Cousin Joe Engle did not come over with his club. Cousin Joe sheds suffering at every pore during close great games and this one would have fitted him for the boozy house. That one run of the Crackers, which loomed larger and larger each inning, was made in the first inning. It was a pretty big run to stretch across nine innings but it did and the Crackers stepped into definite possession of fourth place in the first division.

The Cracker tally came in curious fashion. It required the longest single ever made in baseball to score the run that won the game.

CROWD EXCITED.

Sam Langford opened the Crackers' half of the first inning as the crowd cheered lustily. Andy Messenger had struck out Dashiell and Walker and caused Treadaway to roll out weakly. And the crowd was excited.

Its ardor was not cooled when Sam Langford flew out to Frank Walker. Jack Sheehan popped one up just back of the pitcher. He went trotting apologetically down toward first base.

Reb Russell, Wally Dashiell and Johnny Jones came charging in to the ball. And there they stood in a football huddle while the ball thudded

BUNNY HEARN IS PURCHASED FROM ORIOLES

Amos Martin Signed; Grimes Back on List; Gregory Off.

By Ralph McGill.

Bunny Hearn, left-handed pitcher, has been purchased from Baltimore, and "Jughandle" John Dewey Morrison, late of the Brooklyn Robins, is to report here early this week, possibly today, to talk terms.

Those were the announcements of Saturday from the Cracker ball park which attracted most attention. There was still other news. Amos Martin, teammate of Luke Appling, the apple of your eye, when he was at Oglethorpe this past spring, was signed. Roy Grimes, first baseman, was back on the list and Paul Gregory, Mississippi's M. pitcher, was taken off the list. He is expected to be sent to a Southeastern league club, probably Jacksonville.

Reb Russell, Cracker official, said Saturday night that he had wired Morrison to come on down and talk terms. Morrison was reported as having been dickered with the Vols but is coming on to Atlanta and if his terms are acceptable he will be placed in a Cracker uniform when the club returns here Wednesday after three days on the road.

Morrison, who lives at Owensboro, Ky., was released a short time ago by the Brooklyn Robins. He was one of the leading pitchers who came down the Pirates in 1920 from the Barons he struck through 1927 to establish a pitching record that was above the average. He had a curve ball that gave him his name. He was always throwing that old Kentucky "jug handle" up there and the boys couldn't hit it.

SLIPS OUT.

He slipped out of the majors during the 1927 season and went to Kansas City in 1927. John Morrison loved a gay sort of life, so the boys said, and it was this that took him out of the game.

Your Uncle Wilbert Robinson, always a great hand to try players, says others have given up on, took Morrison in the early part of the 1929 season and sent him in to win 13 games and lose seven for the Robins.

Morrison's comeback was one of the sensations of the 1929 season. He got in bad with Robbie this spring and was fined and subsequently released, the latter action coming a few days ago.

BUNNY TRANSFERRED.

Bunny Hearn, who was used by the Barons as a relief pitcher during a part of last season, was recently transferred to New Haven by the Baltimore Orioles. He won three games there and lost two and right back again by the Orioles. They were top heavy with pitchers and the Crackers, who began the deal a week ago, were able to complete it only yesterday.

"I used Hearn a lot as a relief man," said Dobbie. "I had a good pitching staff and didn't have to start him much but I think he can go as a starting pitcher. In either capacity he will be a benefit to us."

Reb Russell was also encouraged by the deal bringing Hearn to the club. "I think he can win some games for us," he said. "And I think the club will keep right on in the race."

The pitching of Andy Messenger stirred the club officials to enthusiasm. "That's the way he pitched last year," said Dobbie. "He hasn't been feeling well but is stronger now and should give us one of those games every five days."

Amos Martin, ex-Peitel star, is likely to be farmed out for more seasoning. Dobbie regards him as a likely prospect. No disposition will be made of him for a few days until Dobbie has had a chance to look him over.

RED EXPECTED BACK.

Red Barron, injured outfielder, is also expected to rejoin the club this week.

The Crackers play the Lookouts today at Chattanooga and meet Birmingham at that city on Monday and Tuesday. They open at Spiller field on Wednesday with the Vols.

COLQUITT COUNTY
KILLED BY TRUCK

MOULTRIE, Ga., July 5.—Lewis Folsom, 30-year-old Colquitt county farmer, was killed Saturday afternoon when he was hit by a truck driven by Frank Bass, 19, son of Pope Bass, prominent Brooks county live stock man, according to a report at police headquarters.

Folsom was walking along the highway, going in the same direction that Bass was driving. Folsom looked back twice, Bass asserts, and he thought that he would pull to one side of the wide highway and out of danger of the truck.

Bass did not bring his machine to a stop at the scene of the accident. He said he was so excited that he did not know what he was doing. Just as soon as he realized what had happened he came to Moultrie and surrendered to local officers. Bass said a move to obtain his release under bond will be made.

40 Jews Injured
In Warsaw Melee

WARSAW, July 5.—(Jewish Telegraphic Agency).—More than 40 Jews were injured today and yesterday in attacks by hooligans on the Jewish quarter of Kovel.

The trouble began when a number of Jews were injured in a quarrel with Polish swimmers. Revolvers, knives and sticks were used by the hooligans. The Jews of the town deserted the streets, barred the doors of their houses and closed their shops. The windows in many Jewish houses and shops were smashed.

A delegation of Jews headed by the president of the Jewish community and the rabbis asked the protection of the municipal authorities but were informed by the district police chief that there were not enough police. The delegation then left for Lutsk to see the district commissioner and ask for his intervention.

Georgians Watching
Pennsylvania Race

In spite of the traditional political belief that a democrat has no more chance of winning in Pennsylvania than a republican has in South Carolina, Georgians are watching with keen interest the campaign for governor in the Keystone state which John McKie Hemphill, the democratic nominee, is making.

Mr. Hemphill is related to the Georgia family of the same name. Mrs. Percy Sneyd Darlington, formerly Miss Julia Taylor, a niece of the late Colonel Robert J. Lowry, is one of the active leaders of the Hemphill forces.

Former Governor Clifford Pinchot is the republican candidate and his dryness, some experts are pointing out, will give Hemphill, a decided wet, a chance in Pennsylvania this fall. He is said to have a strong following in both Allegheny and Philadelphia counties, large anti-prohibition strongholds.

40 Jews Injured
In Warsaw Melee

WARSAW, July 5.—(Jewish Telegraphic Agency).—More than 40 Jews were injured today and yesterday in attacks by hooligans on the Jewish quarter of Kovel.

The trouble began when a number of Jews were injured in a quarrel with Polish swimmers. Revolvers, knives and sticks were used by the hooligans. The Jews of the town deserted the streets, barred the doors of their houses and closed their shops. The windows in many Jewish houses and shops were smashed.

A delegation of Jews headed by the president of the Jewish community and the rabbis asked the protection of the municipal authorities but were informed by the district police chief that there were not enough police. The delegation then left for Lutsk to see the district commissioner and ask for his intervention.

$100,000 Preserving Plant at Montezuma, Built in Record Time, To Open Thursday

MONTZUMA, Ga., July 5.—With the formal opening of the $100,000 preserving plant at Montezuma, the Tom Huston, Inc., a $100,000 plant for the preserving of fresh fruits and vegetables by a freezing process, a record was made here for speed in construction work. The site was purchased for the plant on May 21, the work of removing a seven-room house began the following morning, and the race with time was on. Monday, July 7, will see the plant completed, and the following Thursday it will be open for inspection. It will be running full time with three shifts of workers.

When Tom Huston, convinced that he had found a process by which fresh fruits and vegetables could be made available for the American home throughout the entire year, and realizing the vast amount of these products going to waste in the orchards and on the farms of Georgia, began to look about for a location for this plant which was to be the first of its kind in the world, his eyes fell on Montezuma and Macon county, in the heart of the peach and asparagus belt of the south. Here was the ideal site. And, as was stated by Fred A. Wolcott, president of the Tom Huston Peanut Company, "As Huston had glorified the peanut, he could also glorify the peach and the fig and other southern fruits," but it was here that the element of time played a critical part. The first brick of the plant had not been laid on May 21, and July 3 would be the high point in the peach season.

C. E. Lund, vice president of the Parklawn Construction Company, of New York and Tampa, who was present and ready to get on the job when the final papers were signed, when asked how he would assemble and erect in so short a time a building of brick, concrete and steel 60 by 200 feet, replied that on a previous contract he had erected a building of similar dimensions and eight stories high in Tampa in 33 working days.

He worked, everybody connected with the enterprise worked. In two days the A. B. & C. railroad had laid a spur to the site and, as if by magic, all materials necessary for modern construction work were arriving. In less than 60 days this building, thoroughly equipped, every piece of machinery in place, and turned over to Tom Huston, Inc., and on July 10 the new industry, running full time with three shifts will be formally opened for inspection.

With the completion of this plant, tree-ripened Georgia peaches will be prepared under what is known as the Tucker process—a system of cooling introduced by W. R. Tucker, general agricultural agent of the Atlanta, Birmingham & Coast railroad.

Experiments Planned.

While established primarily for the handling of peaches, the Tom Huston Inc., announces that in the plant experiments will be made in connection with many other perishable crops grown in this section, any of which it is believed, can be kept fresh indefinitely by the use of dry ice, and it is its purpose to utilize this plant to help solve the problem of the farmers in this section. Conservation is the word most emphasized, however, for it is not proposed to encourage a larger and increased planting of peaches, but rather to find a stable and regular market for that surplus of a splendid crop of peaches growing in this section.

The establishment of this unique plant in Montezuma is destined to attract the attention of the whole produce marketing world. It is the result of a year's careful thought and co-operation between officials of the A. B. & C. railroad and the business men of Montezuma, whose support has made possible the establishment of this new industry here, and it is felt that, on account of the unlimited possibilities which it holds for fruit and vegetables, it will be the means of a renewal of hope and faith in farming and fruit growing.

MEETING DEMAND

For the first time in many weeks, the combined forwardings of 35 fruits and vegetables exceeded the corresponding shipments of last season.

Movement of these products was 40 per cent greater than the preceding week and 1,800 cars heavier than a year ago. Output reached 27,150 cars for the seven-day period, chiefly because of the heavier 1935 shipments of watermelons, potatoes, tomatoes, beans, peaches and western deciduous fruits. Watermelon movement alone exceeded 10,400 cars last week and potatoes 6,250 with cantaloupes and melons requiring more than 1,700 cars each.

Prices of watermelons dropped very sharply and suddenly, as heavy movement from Georgia was added to that from Florida and other southern states. Potatoes declined, as the Virginia season got into full swing. Georgia peaches were generally lower, although shipping points reported considerable firmness by the close of the week. Cantaloupes were dull and lower in producing sections of Arizona and California. Onions were strengthened everywhere, as the Mississippi and Texas seasons neared an end. Onion markets reported heavy reports indicating far heavier supplies of watermelons, tomatoes and onions available this summer than last year.

New crop apples shipments increased to 190 carloads, with Illinois furnished 115. The apple season opened in Delaware, Maryland and West Virginia. Movement of cabbage was up to 150 cars, with Illinois compared with 475 a year ago. Most active shipping states were Missouri, Illinois and New Jersey. First shipments were reported from Ohio, Kentucky and Ohio. Output of celery in southern California decreased to 120 cars, while Michigan increased to 30, and the season began in Oregon. Cherry shipments were increasing and required 460 cars last week. Washington started 240 cars of cherries to market, Idaho 115, and California 120. As movement of North Carolina cucumbers dropped to 220 cars the week's total from all states was only 315. Virginia furnished 150 cars, and movement started in Maryland.

Both Imperial Valley and the southern district of California were shipping grapes; output increased to 55 cars, with California crop state was leading as a source of green peas. The week's total forwardings of peas doubled to 190 cars, which was a year ago. Onions from Washington supplied 95, Idaho 20 and Washington 15. Orange shipments from California increased slightly to 750 cars, but were less than half as heavy as a year ago. Onions from Washington were moving more actively and required 670 cars, compared with 260 during the same period last summer.

Potatoes Selling Lower

The trend of potato prices was distinctly downward last week. Last report on cobsiders from North Carolina showed an L.O.B. level of $3 per barrel, and east shore of Virginia potatoes had declined to $3.25. About the middle of the week Oklahoma potatoes of Bliss Triumphs were getting $1.50-1.65 per 100 pounds cash. Kew Valley of Kansas and Oriskany of Missouri had declined to a cash price of $3.25 per 100 pounds sack of best cobsiders. City sales of eastern barrels were mostly at $3.45-50 and the Chicago carlot market was depressed to $1.75-1.85 with several city quotations sales of Triumphs at $1.75-3 per sack. Tennessee cobsiders ruled $2.25-2.75. Because of heavy movement of 100 cars of Virginia, the week's total output of new stock increased further to 6,045 cars, and was considerably heavier than a year ago. North Carolina cobsiders were leading as a source of total supply for the seven-day period and Oklahoma to 405 cars, Kansas and Missouri each shipped about 275 cars, and Maryland was at 225 cars. Total was 110 cars. Some cities still quoted Green Mountains at $1.65-2.50 per 100 pounds.

Heavy Melon Crops

Seven season early crops expect a crop of 45,000 tons, or 15 per cent more than in 1929. Georgia alone may have 25,000-30,000 melons, an increase of 2,100,000 over last season. Shipments of watermelons last week exceeded those of any other product and totaled 10,400 cars, or a daily average of 1,500 cars. Thursday's movement of 1,550 cars. Of the total Georgia came to the front with 4,355, and Florida still shipped 3,515 cars. Texas had increased to 1,275, and Illinois decreased to 1,200. Alabama and South Carolina, with the season starting also in Mississippi, Imperial Valley of California decreased to 150 cars.

The L.O.B. market at Leesburg, Fla., was very weak and dull at $50-100 per carload of 24 to 30-pound melons. The south Georgia market also was dull and drab. On a 100-pound basis southern Texas melons were returning $1.50 per bushel, with demand active. Mississippi shippers received 50 to 55 per flat rate or $10 to $15 with the four-bushel crates. Mississippi at $1.50 to $1.75. Tennessee boxes ruled $1.50 to $1.75 in a few consuming centers. The six-bushel crates from South Carolina and Georgia sold at $1.25 to $2.

More Onions Expected

Production of onions in seven intermediate sections may total 2,388,000 bushels, an increase of 8 per cent over their 1929 figure. Last week's shipments decreased to 300 cars, of which California furnished 175 and Texas only 10. First forwardings increased slightly and the season opened in Kentucky. Values were somewhat firmer, under the very limited supplies. Commercial grade Yellow Bermudas from Texas sold mostly at $1.25 to $1.75 per crate, with Crystal Wax stock at $1.75 to $2.25 and boilers as high as $2.75. The jobbing range on California Yellow Bermudas was $1.40 to $2.25 and on Crystal Wax onions $1.75 to $2. Red onions from northern California brought $2.50 to $3 per 100-pound sack in a few markets. New York

Tomatoes Abundant

Movement from Mississippi had decreased to 390 cars last week, and eastern Texas shipped only 555, while Tennessee increased greatly to 570 and North Carolina 125 cars. Arkansas was active and Virginia was starting. Total of 1,725 cars was 450 more than a year ago. Eastern Texas shipped 100 cars, with demand active. Southern Mill Stock

Prices Were Lower

CHARLOTTE, N. C., July 5.—The market for southern cotton mill shares remained quiet and inactive through out the week with the majority of sales in small scattered lots of both common and preferred stock.

The closing price representing the average bid of 25 common stocks stood at 73.80 or a net loss for the week.

Prices were firm at $2.25 per share, weekly summary as compiled by R. S. Dickson & Co.

Glass Firms Merge

TOLEDO, July 5.—(P)—The Berney-Bond Glass Company, Toledo, Pa., second largest manufacturer of milk bottles in the world, is now a part of the Owens-Illinois Glass Company. Titles to the Berney-Bond business passed to Owens-Illinois.

A conference here between Ben F. Hazelton, president of Owens-Illinois, and other executives of the Toledo company, was held at the Clarion Hotel.

city quoted bushel hampers of yellow from New Jersey at $1.25 to $1.50 and from California at $1.25. Light arrivals of Valencia from Spain brought $2 per crate in New York.

There was an active demand for medium to large sized Hiley peaches at Georgia shipping points and the price there was firm at $2.25 per bushel. Six-basket crates after having been as low as $1.75. Half-bushel baskets returned $1.10. Dealers in large containers reported a downward price trend, as a result of total shipments for the week increasing to 1,050 cars. Georgia increased to 1,050 cars, and light shipments came from a few other states.

Tomatoes Abundant

Ten intermediate tomato states expect a combined crop of 6,450,000 bushels or 10 per cent more than last year. Maryland and Missouri reported for considerable crops in 1929, but good increases are expected in Arkansas, California, New Jersey, North Carolina and Tennessee. Movement from Mississippi had decreased to 390 cars last week, and eastern Texas shipped only 555, while Tennessee increased greatly to 570 and North Carolina 125 cars. Arkansas was active and Virginia was starting. Total of 1,725 cars was 450 more than a year ago. Eastern Texas shipped 100 cars, with demand active. Mississippi shippers received 50 to 55 per flat rate or $10 to $15 with the four-bushel crates. Mississippi at $1.50 to $1.75. Tennessee boxes ruled $1.50 to $1.75 in a few consuming centers. The six-basket crates from South Carolina and Georgia sold at $1.25 to $2.

More Onions Expected

Production of onions in seven intermediate sections may total 2,388,000 bushels, an increase of 8 per cent over their 1929 figure. Last week's shipments decreased to 300 cars, of which California furnished 175 and Texas only 10. First forwardings increased slightly and the season opened in Kentucky. Values were somewhat firmer, under the very limited supplies. Commercial grade Yellow Bermudas from Texas

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED BY RALPH T. JONES

S. R. O.

Ralph T. Jones

Have a big Fourth?

Yeah, I s'pose so. Anyway, the old bean is so lousy and the old arms are so tired this is going to be a mighty short dissertation today, brethren and sistren.

Glancing over coming programs, first place must go to the new Paramount. Just because it is new, if for no other reason. When you walk in the good old show shop at Ptree and Pryr, you'll hardly know it, it's that new. And curiosity to scan the new stage shows—with those allegedly beautiful "Paramount Rocket" girls, is going to draw many of us inside this week, anyway. Yes, sir. Many of us.

Sunkist Beauties at the Fox are demonstrating versatility this week by playing the piano. Everyone of them. After looking over there are several I wouldn't mind applying that music publisher's advice to. You know—"Take this home and try it on your piano."

Gunmen and gamblers hold sway on the Capitol screen this week.

"Not Damaged"
Is New Picture Offered at Fox
Lois Moran, Walter Byron and Robert Ames Take Leads in Feature.

The Fox theater feature picture this week, which opened yesterday, is "Not Damaged," a story of a shopgirl in a large department store who experiments with life in its modern sense and came near to being "damaged." "Not Damaged" has as its feature players Lois Moran, Walter Byron and Robert Ames, and the story up to a point is the usual story of the young working girl who views the "passing show" with more or less dissatisfaction at her lack of excitement and the apparent ease of life of many of her customers.

The carefree young rich man, played by Walter Byron, is not at all careless in his consideration of the young working girl, and the working man, played by Robert Ames, is not at all the defender of the young heroine. The shopgirl, portrayed by Lois Moran, is not at all overwhelmed by her anxiety to get into the midst of the gay life.

Light comedy is plentifully sprinkled through the tense situation.

week in "The Czar of Broadway." A good story cleverly filmed, with oodles of punch. Here is a newspaper reporter and there's only one thing he does that isn't true to newspaper reporting life. See if you notice it and let us know. Thanks.

For just good entertainment and clever plot development, you can't go wrong by visiting the Metropolitan this week. "Hello Sister," is a mighty good picture. Personally, however, I wish the gal hadn't got the million at the end, anyway. More romantic without it, you know.

Still waiting for report from Lew Haase's progress in arranging the fall season for the Er-langer Theater Players. Does that man intend to stay in New York all summer?

Colonel Ed Schiller, executive vice president of Loew's, Inc., came back home to Atlanta to spend the holidays. Colonel Schiller reached the city Thursday and it is understood, will jump back to New York Monday. As everyone knows, the colonel is another of Atlanta's home town boys who made good in the bigger city.

Other characters in the story are played by Inez Courtney, George Corcoran, Rhoda Cross and Ernest Wood.

"Whisper You Love Me," a very pretty song number, is sung by Byron. A Mickey Mouse cartoon, "Choo-Choo," is also on the screen bill, with the latest Fox Movietone News.

RADIE HARRIS

CAROL LOMBARD

Only thing that isn't real about her is her name. Was christened Jane Peters. Adopted "Carol" from a numerologist and "Lombard" from the charming lady she hoped to be like when she grew up. Was not an optimist in vain.

Increased the population of Fort Wayne, Ind., on October 6—twenty-one years ago.

Moved to California when she was seven years old. Had the foresight to live next door to a motion picture director. Which explains why at the age of 10 she satisfied her life long ambition to become an actress. Was cast as Monte Blue's little sister. Has never played "sister" to a man since.

Accident a Handicap. Five years later was well launched on a promising career when she was badly hurt in an automobile smash-up. Had 25 stitches taken in her face and was incapacitated for a year and a half. Never once brooded about the possibility of permanent disfigurement. Which is the reason she has only small scar on her right cheek now to prove she ever was in accident.

And, Ladies and Gentlemen, the Screen Brings You---

Here are the big audible screen sensations of the week. Upper left you see Lois Moran and Inez Courtney in a scene from "Not Damaged" at the Fox. Upper center is a shot from the screen record of Admiral Byrd's heroic adventures in the Antarctic. This particular scene is the loading of the Paramount movie camera on the plane that flew over the south pole—the while said camera ground on for your delectation. See it at the Paramount. The boy and girl with the horse are Olive Borden and Lloyd Hughes, in a scene from "Hello Sister," at the Metropolitan. Lower left is a tense moment from "Shadow of the Law," which stars William Powell at Keith's Georgia. Lower center shows Betty Compson and John Wray in "The Czar of Broadway," a story of gunmen and gamblers, at Loew's Capitol. Lower right is from "Dames Ahoy," at the Rialto, with Glenn Tyrone, Eddie Gribbon and Otis Harlan as the jolly tars. And the little girl in the oval is Helen Kane, who returns in "Paramount on Parade" at the Cameo the first half of the week.

As a child always adored Marguerite Clark, but wanted to play roles like Nita Naldi. Now admires Gloria Swanson, but hopes to emulate Jeanne Eagels and Constance Talmadge. Would be perfectly happy if all her leading men were Frederic March, Chester Morris and Warner Baxter.

Can always tell whether she is going to like a person by looking at their hands. Isn't the least bit interested in their pocketbooks.

Never has to look at a menu to order her luncheon. Is always the named-sliced tomatoes with Thousand Island dressing. Hasn't tasted starches of any kind in years. Her figure is the answer to the modern maiden's prayer.

Likes designing her own clothes, doing what she wants to do when she wants to do it, sea food, people who can teach her things, colonial furniture, Donn Byrne and crying at a picture.

Straightforward. Hates snappy heroines, meaningless chatter, windstorms, false modesty and having people plan things for her when she has her own plans.

Is a terrific bargain hunter. Has but one extravagant yearning to own a priceless emerald ring some day.

Will never give vent to any volcanic outbursts. Was in the Santa Barbara earthquake.

Drives a Ford and a La Salle. Has also been known to drive men "ga ga."

Is a fanatic on the subject of astrology and numerology. Would not even name her Alaskan wolfhound without consulting a numerologist. The poor dog will never know why he is called "Bascio."

Rockets Feature Paramount Show

Twelve Girlies are Topliners in New Paramount Offering.

Presenting a dozen gorgeously beautiful dancing girls. "The Paramount Rockets," and with a trio of featured performers ranking far above the average for their type, the new Paramount theater this week introduces to Atlanta a new program policy, combining stage and feature screen attractions.

Starred performers in "Valentines on Parade," the title of the stage production, are Stella Powers, unusually gifted coloratura soprano; Kendall Capps, eccentric dancer par excellence; and Bobby Pinkus, an original sort of comedian from whose lips a constant stream of laugh-provoking gags pours.

The stage production is notable for the artistry and color of costumes and scenery, while the entire production moves with a snap and rhythm.

Lou Powers and his grand orchestra offer for their first appearance in the pit of a local theater, Victor Herbert's popular overture to "The Fortune Teller." Gladys Lyle, at the console of the big pipe organ, gives a short and clever concert program, while a comedy feature and Paramount Sound News adds to the variety of the screen offerings.

The feature picture is the thrilling story of Antarctic exploration, made by Paramount cameramen attached to the expedition, "With Byrd at the South Pole."

"Behind the Makeup" Billed at Alamo No. 2

Love and fascination conflict in strange fashion in Paramount's superb, dramatic, all-talking picture, "Behind the Makeup," appearing at Alamo No. 2 Monday only. Hal Skelly, Fay Wray and William Powell contribute three wonderful portrayals, while a supporting cast of popular players offer many interesting side-lights.

"Behind the Makeup" tells the story of two men and a girl. Hal Skelly is the easy-going young comedian, hampered by a crippling inferiority complex. William Powell has the part of a fascinating Latin artist whose dominating personality soon envelopes Skelly and captures the heart of Fay Wray, whom Skelly loves. Skelly and Powell form a vaudeville team and success brings them to New York. Skelly is overshadowed by Powell. When fate moves Powell, Skelly is lost for a while, but finally discovers his own latent talents and Fay Wray discovers that Powell's fascination was not really love.

"Hello Sister," Film Sensation At Metropolitan

"Hello Sister," one of the most sensational stories of modern youth yet produced on the talking screen, has been secured by the Metropolitan company as the feature attraction this week at the Metropolitan theater.

This story, directed by Walter Lang under the supervision of James Cruze, reveals more vividly than any other picture the excesses and extremes to which some types of modern youth go in their search for new thrills in a world that has become, to them, blasé before they are 20.

A cast of famous players, headed by the piquant Olive Borden and the popular young leading man, Lloyd Hughes, present the story in a startlingly realistic manner. Others in the cast include George Fawcett, Basil Rodin, John E. Mack, etc.

This picture, which utters a sensational in some of its episodes, is nevertheless so realistically and powerfully told that it has been indorsed by leading ministers in every city where it has been shown. It has produced heated controversy but, so important and vital is the moral told, that it has likewise been acclaimed as a great factor for good.

By special request from many patrons of the theater, "Up the Congo," fascinating picture of wild life in darkest Africa, has been held over for a second week and will be an added attraction—with no increase in prices—with "Hello Sister."

Keith's Presents Good Vodvil Bill

Program Is One of Variety With Four Acts Scheduled.

The vaudeville show at Keith's Georgia theater, beginning tomorrow, is indeed one of variety, for it has four acts which do not resemble each other in any way.

Paxton, the lightning calculator, known as the boy with the camera mind, will present a very novel act, it is said that he knows the population, location and industry of every city in the south.

Stuart and Lash will present their hilarious sketch "Oh Doctor," which was written by William K. Wells, author of "The Cockeyed World."

The Mascogno Four, a quartet of young dancers, present their latest offering which they call Dancers Extraordinary. In this presentation they depart from the ordinary dances and perform their specialties with pep and speed seldom attempted in this work. Stuart and Lash, in addition to their own highly humorous offering, will also appear with their Cavaliers and Jerry Withers. The Cavaliers are a band of syncopating instruments that enjoy playing music that is known as red hot.

HUNTINGDON, Quebec.—During May the secretary of the Canadian Ayshire Breeders' Association received 153 reports of cows and heifers that qualified in the R. O. P.—51 in the 365-day division and 102 in honor roll or 305-day test. In the former, 22 qualified in the mature class; four in the four-year old; eight in the three-year old and 17 in the two-year old class. Thirty-three of these records were made on two milkings a day.

"I've got a few prospects lined up," said the captain of the Mexican firing squad.—The Pathfinder.

Screen Comedian Byrd Pole Film On Capitol Stage Screen Feature At Paramount

Charlie Kemper, Pathe Star, Headliner on Local Vaudeville Bill.

Thrills of Byrd Expedition Reopens Publix Deluxe House.

Charlie Kemper, famous for his comedy work on the talking screen—he has been the star of many Pathe comedy hits—comes to Loew's Capitol theater this week in the headline act of another of those splendid programs of Loew's 'Ave' vaudeville to which Atlanta is becoming accustomed.

Kemper, one of the cleverest comedians ever on the stage, has an act funnier than anything he has produced before. He is assisted by a unique personality "Jeannie" and his act is entitled "Beach Babies." There is a big surprise in this act and it would spoil the fun to give it away in advance.

Second place on the bill is taken by Casa and Lehn and company, in an extravaganza called "The Hollywood Rush." Nick Casa is an exceptional comedian while his partner, Elsie Lehn, is not only an accomplished dancer but also one of the funniest women in the vaudeville business. Others in this act are Yvonne Monoff, an alluring blonde, the Co-Ed Sisters, and Georgette.

Russell and Marconi offer one of vaudeville's funniest musical acts, while at the same time they demonstrate that they are no mean performers on almost any instrument, when they essay to play it seriously.

And completing the vaudeville bill is Helen Carlson, beautiful and graceful trapeze performer. Miss Carlson, now one of the topnotch performers of her line, nine years ago was believed to be dying of tuberculosis. She took up trapeze work for exercise and today she is, physically, one of the most perfect women on the stage.

The talking screen feature is "The Czar of Broadway," a thriller of gamblers and gunmen, with John Wray, Betty Compson and John Harron in the principal roles.

Inaugurating a new program policy of combination screen and stage features, and marking the reopening of the rebuilt and renovated Paramount theater, one of the greatest and most awe-inspiring features yet produced since the invention of the motion picture camera is showing this week at the popular downtown theater.

This is "With Byrd at the South Pole," the record of the greatest adventure undergone by men in the twentieth century, the imperishable story of the hardships and sufferings the intrepid band of antarctic explorers unites credit on the product, the story on film. It carries as much punch as the greatest fiction picture ever made, and holds every audience in suspense throughout.

Including the historic flight over the south pole, Byrd and three companions, and detailing the endless struggle against the terrors of the six-month-long antarctic winter, Paramount cameramen attached to the expedition have made a breath-taking story on film. It carries as much punch as the greatest fiction picture ever made, and holds every audience in suspense throughout.

"Valentines on Parade," a colorful unit production, while Lou Forbes and his grand orchestra make their Atlanta debut with Victor Herbert's beautiful overture, "The Fortune Teller." There is also a short comedy subject and Paramount Sound News on the screen.

Hebraic Cultural Circle Meets Today

Members of the Hebraic Cultural Circle of Atlanta will hear as a speaker at 10 o'clock today at 318 Capitol avenue, Dr. David Beth-Lahmy, principal of the United Hebrew school, who will deliver a critical introduction to the Book of Job.

Morris Gershon, chairman, will continue his weekly lectures on Biblical topics from the original Hebrew with D. Hadas will present some interesting thoughts on Midrashic literature. Atlanta Jewry is cordially invited to attend these meetings.

Newspaper Ads Played Big Part In Tissues Week

Newspaper advertising played a real part in national Scott Tissues week, it was announced by officials of the Scott Paper Company. The campaign appeared in The Atlanta Constitution, and in regard to the success achieved the announcement says that it reflects credit on the product, the selling, the advertising and the media used.

For the first time in its history, the Scott Paper Company traded more than $1,000,000 of business during one month in June. Net sales for the month ending June 28 were $1,005,125.77, an increase of more than 35 per cent in comparison with the corresponding month of last year. National Scott Tissues week was observed during the final week of June.

NEWS of STAGE and SCREEN

EDITED BY RALPH T. JONES

Capitol Presents Racketeer Story, 'Czar of Broadway'

Feature of Screen Similar in Plot to Rothstein Murder Mystery.

"The Czar of Broadway," one of the most thrilling stories of the underworld ever told by the audible screen, is the feature at Loew's Capitol this week. This, another of the super productions made this year by Universal, is acclaimed everywhere as one of the greatest films of gamblers and gunmen ever made.

It tells the story of one Bradley, nonchalant gambler and king of the racketeers of New York. Ostensibly a successful real estate and insurance broker, he is actually the biggest gambler of the city and a man who never hesitates to employ a gunman to remove those he considers have not played square with him.

This role, one that will live in the memory of everyone who sees it, is played by John Wray, who won cinema fame as the hard-boiled detective in "All Quiet on the Western Front." Other leading parts are splendidly portrayed by Betty Compton and John Harron.

There are features of the story that indicate it was at least inspired by the life and death of Arnold Rothstein, the Broadway gambler whose murder has been the leading unsolved mystery in New York for three or four years. The character Bradley is sufficiently like Rothstein to carry through the resemblance and the plot, together with the denouement, while differing in detail, follows the Arnold story in broad outline.

Another splendid program of Loew vaudeville will complete the bill, together with sound news reels and short subjects.

Madison Feature Is 'Devil May Care'

Ramon Navarro in "Devil May Care" is the feature offered Monday at the Madison theater in East Atlanta. Wednesday, Ken Maynard in "Senior Americano," Thursday and Friday, "Rio Rita" with John Boles and Hebe Daniels, will be the feature picture. Plenty of action will be seen Saturday in "Side Street."

Aunt Minnie was taking her first trip on a train. When the conductor came through the car and called for tickets Auntie readily gave up hers. A few minutes later the train boy coming through called, "Cheering gum!"

"Never!" cried Aunt Minnie, bravely. "You can take my ticket, but not my gum!"—The Pathfinder.

Chattanooga Girl Dancing Teacher Now an Atlantan

Miss Dorothy McCormick, charming young terpsichorean expert, has moved to Atlanta from Chattanooga.

MISS DOROTHY MCCORMICK.

her former home, and plans to open her own dancing school here in the near future.

Miss McCormick, shortly after her arrival here, was engaged by the Capitol theater to assist Mrs. Ruth Alpert, producer of the recent kiddie revue, "Toy Town," which was given, with 100 Atlanta children in the cast, as a benefit for the Scottish Rite Crippled Children's milk fund. Thousands who saw the revue are still talking enthusiastically of its splendid entertainment value and the remarkable way in which the child performers were trained.

Before leaving the city for her home in New York, Miss Alpert said that a large part of the credit for the splendid performance of the children in the ensemble numbers must be given to Miss McCormick.

"She was invaluable and without her it would have been utterly impossible to train so many children and produce so elaborate a revue in the short time at our disposal," Miss Alpert said.

Miss McCormick is living with her parents on Ponce de Leon avenue.

'Shadow of Law,' With Bill Powers Offered at Keith's

Stuart and Lash in "Oh Doctor" Heads R. K. O. Vaudeville Bill.

The talking picture has made a star of William Powell. Of course, there are many who will say that Powell has always been a fine actor. And this is true. However, it was not until Paramount's first talking picture, "Interference," that Powell found himself. Dialogue gave him his opportunity, just as dialogue wrote finis on the careers of any number of former movie favorites.

Still more recently Powell created what is considered to be the outstanding role of his career. And that is the "Natural" Davis of "Street of Chance." Acclaimed one of the best pictures of the year, its great success was in no small measure due to Powell's brilliant performance in the dominant role.

And now comes word of his second starring picture, "Shadow of the Law," which opens a week's run at Keith's Georgia theater Monday.

In "Shadow of the Law" the opening scene shows Powell escorting a beautiful woman he has known only a few hours to the door of her apartment suite. As the woman opens the door, a man who has been waiting for her jumps up and demands to know where she has been. Powell is embarrassed and leaves immediately. This is the beginning of the tense plot, structure of William Powell's new Paramount release, "Shadow of the Law." In support of Powell are Marion Shilling, a new leading lady; Natalie Moorhead, Regis Toomey and Paul Hurst.

On the stage will be seen Stuart and Lash in one of William K. Well's latest skits, "Oh Doctor." Paxton, the mental mangle, is also on the bill. The Mascagno Four, a quintet of young dancers, are very good. Stuart and Lash and their Cavaliers, with Jerry Withee, present a highly diverting and humorous jollification in a musical setting.

She is well known as a dancer throughout the south and has taken star roles in many recent productions. She is a graduate of the University of Chattanooga and a member of the national woman's sorority, Chi Omega.

A customer sat down to table in a smart restaurant and tied his serviette round his neck. The manager, scandalized, called a boy and said to him:

"Try to make him understand as tactfully as possible that that's not done."

Boy (seriously, to customer): A shave or hair-cut, sir?

Here To Entertain You

These people are featured performers of the stage aggregations that have come to the city for your entertainment this week. At upper left is Helen Carlson, lovely and graceful gymnast of the trapeze, who is on the Loew "Acad" vaudeville program at the Capitol. And the nonchalant young person in the wicker chair at upper right is one of Fanchon and Marco's Sunkist Beauties resting back stage at the Fox between shows of "Ivory," the elaborate stage "idea" of the week. Lower left is Kendall Capps, one of the best among comedians, who is a featured player in "Valentines on Parade," which furnishes the chief stage entertainment for the reopening program of the vastly improved Paramount. And, at lower right is "Paxton," man of the marvelous memory, who can do mental tricks you'd never believe, who is a headliner at Keith's Georgia.

'Vagabond King' Heads Program For Buckhead

Heading the program at the new Buckhead theater is Paramount's outstanding picture of the current year, "The Vagabond King." This all technician production is rated as one of the outstanding pictures produced since the advent of sound. Dennis King, the most romantic actor singer in New York and Jeanette MacDonald, the beautiful Broadway prima donna, head the cast.

"Street Girl," featuring Betty Compton and Jack Oakie, is the offering for Wednesday and Thursday.

For Friday and Saturday the feature offering is Universal's action drama, "The Night Ride," featuring Joseph Schildkraut. In addition, the dition the Paramount cartoons, "A Yankee Doodle Boy," and the sixth episode of the serial, "Tarzan, the Tiger," will be shown.

Beginning on Saturday night at 8 o'clock and continuing every Saturday night thereafter, the Buckhead theater will put on a big amateur contest on the stage.

Census statistics indicate there are 13,000,000 bachelors in the United States. Cheer up, girls, only one more year until leap year. "The home of movie stars—Beverly Hills—leads with a population gain of 2,486.6 per cent. Maybe this is due to the fact that Lon Chaney can always be counted on for a variety of faces. . . . We suppose the census blanks used thereabouts were made up principally of space for listing former husbands and wives. . . . A census taker found only one man in 293 square miles of mountain country, and he was not a resident. Just try, and he was not a resident. Just everything.—The Pathfinder.

Fox Stage Offers New Idea in 'Ivory'

Enrico Leide and Dwight Brown To Present Special Musical Program.

The Fanchon and Marco idea, "Ivory," opening yesterday at the Fox theater, is a clever stage presentation, in keeping with the high class of these entertainments. "Ivory" has one distinct surprise in the Sunkist beauties, in that they are not only excellent dancers, but each is a splendid musician. Another feature of the act is a mistress of ceremonies, Betty Lou Webb, who wears male attire, and looks very distinguished thus garbed. Mel Ruick, the Fox theater master of ceremonies, is directing his musicians, and announcements are made by Miss Webb.

Lovers of tap dancing are in for a real treat when the Four High Hatters present their act, and the Cameo Minuet Ballet, together with Hy Myers, comedy pianist, and Peggy Corse, a New Orleans girl.

Goetz and Duffy, quick-change artists, present a decidedly interesting dancing, singing and comedy act. Enrico Leide, conducting the Fox grand orchestra, is playing as the overture this week a miniature edition of the entire "Student Prince," including "The Serenade," "Deep In My Heart" and "The Drinking Song." Dwight Brown, the "organ ace," has another treat in store with his popular number program arranged for this week.

Cameo Has Hit In Paramount's Parade Picture

"Paramount on Parade," the widely heralded "party of the stars," will be the feature attraction at the Cameo the first part of this week. All of the stars and most of the featured players under contract to Paramount appear in "Paramount on Parade," in a series of diversified and highly entertaining skits. Jack Oakie, Skeets Gallagher and Leon Errol introduce an entirely new master of ceremonies idea. Charles Rogers and Lillian Roth do a novel song and dance specialty, and a hilarious travesty on detective murder mysteries is staged by William Powell, Clive Brook, Warner Oland, Eugene Pallette and Oakie. A travesty sketch with music illustrating the origin of the Apache dance in a bedroom is superbly done by Maurice Chevalier and Evelyn Brent. Other stars in this novel presentation include Dennis King, Nancy Carroll, Richard Arlen, Mary Brian, Gary Cooper, Fay Wray, George Bancroft, Clara Bow, Kay Francis and Ruth Chatterton.

"The Light of Western Stars," with Richard Arlen and Mary Brian, shows the last half of this story. This is considered one of the best Zane Grey stories.

Glenn Tryon in "Dames Ahoy" Billed at Rialto

Otis Harlan, Eddie Gribbon and Helen Wright Also Starred.

With Glenn Tryon at the helm and supported by a riotous cargo of funsters, "Dames Ahoy" sails into the Rialto Monday as the week's entertainment.

Tryon, in the role of a wise gob, plays his funniest part in this rollicking tale of a sailor ashore. Assisting him are Otis Harlan, seemingly fat and funny, and Eddie Gribbon, first and last a comedian. All three claim the coveted title of "woman haters" from the drop of the anchor.

Helen Wright, new find for film-dom, makes her screen debut, while Gertrude Astor, a long favorite, is seen in an important role.

The greater part of the action of the plot is laid at a beach resort. Among the many highlights are the adventures of Tryon and his buddies in looking for a blonde with a strawberry birthmark on her leg, which are panics of laughter. Too, Tryon unwittingly wins a dancing contest, carrying the prizes of $800, a bungalow and a bride, is another sequence for plenty of humor.

"Dames Ahoy" is built for fun and a shipload of fun it is. Tryon fans will see him at his best.

One of the most entertaining features of the picture is the rendition of the famous song, "Barnacle Bill," by Tryon, Harlan and Gribbon. Also on the program this week will be seen a comedy de luxe to round out an ideal summertime program of laughter and fun.

Good Reason.

"Elsie is a girl who could have married anybody she pleased."

"Then why is she still single?"

"Because she's never pleased anybody."

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

Conducted in the Interest of Development of Atlanta and the South

INDUSTRIAL STUDIES OUTLINED BY EXPERT

Survey of Natural Conditions Is Recommended.

Vast sums of money have been wasted by American communities in efforts at industrial expansion before ascertaining what they have to offer any industry. This is the statement made by George C. Smith in a recently published extensive study entitled "Industrial Surveys—An Outline for Communities and Manufacturers." Mr. Smith is director of the industrial bureau of the Industrial Club of St. Louis, and is chairman of the industrial property division of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. His industrial survey instructions were made public in Washington recently at the annual conference of industrial bureau managers, sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Mr. Smith is chairman of this conference.

"In the past manufacturers, for the most part, have been guided in the selection of their locations more by prejudice than by scientific research. It has been said by one authority that fully 90 per cent of our industries are located without any preliminary study of the economic fitness of the location. As our country more completely utilizes its natural resources and reduces its pace of development because of lessened opportunities for exploration and exploitation, the success of established industries will depend more and more on economies resulting from location."

"The principal manufacturing costs which may be affected by location relate to raw and semi-finished materials, including freight to the factory; labor, both skilled and common, and including wage scales, turnover and efficiency; power, water, cost of marketing, waste disposal and warehousing of both raw and finished products. Chief among certain indirect or overhead costs which must also be considered are cost of land and building, insurance, equipment, administrative expenses and protection against climate."

"Aside from these, there are those factors not exactly measurable, but which affect the family life of the industrialist and therefore may affect the cost sheet. These have to do with the quality of the municipal and civic institutions; with home life; the type of housing available; the extent of home ownership in the community and the facilities offered working men for acquiring homes; the cost of living; markets and their operation and the availability of fresh supplies of foodstuffs; recreational facilities; schools, churches, clubs and theaters for mental stimulation and development, and social agencies for the care of the unfortunate."

POSTPONEMENT SEEN IN EMBRACERY TRIALS

The cases of three of the six persons accused of tampering with the Walter C. Taylor homicide jury are scheduled for trial before Judge John D. Humphries in Fulton superior court Tuesday, but a postponement is probable Saturday night.

The cases docketed are those of F. L. Norton, whose first trial ended when the jury failed to reach a verdict; Jack Martin and W. A. Adcock. It is known that Solicitor-General John A. Boykin desires to retry Norton first, but his counsel, Clarence Calhoun, Saturday said he was planning to ask for a postponement. It was learned, too, Saturday that the solicitor general desires to give his time if possible to the launching of a new work of the new grand jury which is to be sworn in and charged Monday morning by Judge Humphries. The case of Mrs. J. E. Andrews, accused of criminally libeling the solicitor general, also are docketed for trial Tuesday, but it could not be learned Saturday whether the prosecution and defense are ready to go on. Assistant Solicitor-General Ed A. Stephens is to direct the prosecution of Mrs. Wakefield and Mrs. Andrews. The charge against the two women grew out of a letter to Rawson Collier, a grand jury foreman, in which the solicitor general was attacked. The letter, allegedly written by Mrs. Andrews, was published in a paper, allegedly edited and published by Mrs. Wakefield.

Five persons have been convicted on charges growing out of the graft inquiry and two have entered pleas of guilty. Only one, William P. Price, purchasing agent, who was indicted on four counts of defrauding the city, has been acquitted of the 21 persons under indictment.

Those convicted, former Councilman Harry York, former City Clerk Walter C. Taylor, Jack White, York's former business associate; Adamson J. E. Turner and former Councilman William E. Saunders, ex-chairman of the board of firemasters, all have new trial motions pending, which are scheduled to be considered this month. The cases of York and White are scheduled to come up before Judge John D. Humphries on July 26 while those of Taylor, Turner and Saunders are to be considered by Judge Virgil B. Moore two days later. The dates for consideration of these new trial motions are tentative and may be delayed if court stenographers are not able to complete the records of the various trials. The stenographers, because of extra heavy work, are several months behind in preparing the transcripts.

Others Under Indictment.

The following also are under indictment and awaiting trial, but not on the calendar, in addition to Mrs. Wakefield, Mrs. Andrews and those accused of jury tampering: Alderman J. Allen Couch, Alderman Claude Buchanan, J. E. Robinson, former employee of the city construction department; Councilman Charles L. Chosewood, Councilman Jack Hardy, Alderman Guy Dobbs, Councilman J. T. Osburn, William E. Hensell, former city chief of construction; Fred Wilson, a merchant; R. C. Shoup, real estate man, and Ben J. Massell, also a real estate man. Bruce Baxter, former superintendent of the city garage, and Wiley Melton, former custodian of the auditorium, entered pleas of guilty, the former admitting a bribery charge and the latter an indictment alleging embezzlement. Baxter is awaiting trial on another charge, with one of simple larceny, while York, White and Saunders also have untied indictments pending against them.

Atlanta's Unbroken Skyline

Atlanta's unbroken skyline, as viewed from the top of the Cotton Exchange building. This unusual reproduction of downtown property development embraces more than a baker's dozen of skyscrapers and near-skyscrapers. It also shows the three major improvements nearing completion in the central area. In the background will be discerned the First National Bank building, with its annex under construction, Citizens and Southern National Bank building, the new William-Oliver, Atlanta Trust Company, Grant building, George Muse building, Healey building, and in the foreground, the new Thornton North Pryor building, Haverty Furniture Company's building and the Trust Company of Georgia building, as well as rear portions of the Silvey and Gould buildings and the Kimball House.

Plans for a big real estate workers' outing to be staged on the afternoon of July 25 at Idlewood Park, are being formulated, it was announced Saturday at the Atlanta Real Estate Board.

Arrangements are to be made for elaborate amusement and entertainment features, it was stated. The occasion will enable heads of real estate offices and their large staffs of workers to get together in festive spirit.

An effort will be made to have the brokerage offices close for the afternoon of the outing in order that all workers will be able to participate in the celebrations.

Ex-Atlantan Writes
New Book on Bridge

A book on contract bridge written by a former Atlantan, Victor R. Smith, now of Miami, Fla., has been jointly dedicated to the well known Atlanta bridge expert, Mrs. Annie Adair Foster, who gave Mr. Smith his first lesson in auction bridge and who will hold a contract tournament July 9, at the Druid Hills Golf Club, and to the author's wife.

This book which deals with the finer points of contract bridge has been pronounced a masterpiece of its kind and has caused its author to be recognized as one of the outstanding southern authorities on the subject.

Atlanta To Be Represented
At Toronto Realtor MeetingPresident Cates Heads Large Local Delegation to Dominion; Session Opens July 9.

Atlanta will be well represented at the annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards opening this week for a three-day session in Toronto, Canada, it was announced at local realtor headquarters Saturday.

Among those listed as having departed for the Dominion or planning to leave within the next day or two were Alvin B. Cates, president of the Atlanta Real Estate Board; R. W. Evans, Paul Maddox, Frank Owens, Ward Wight, George Harrison, W. Davis, Sr., Harry Paschal, Hunter Perry and John J. Thompson.

Realtor orators are signifying their readiness to laud and praise their home towns before realtors from cities throughout the United States and Canada at the home town speech contest, which is always a classic feature at the annual convention of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, meeting this year in Toronto, July 9, 10 and 11. Last summer, at the Boston convention, A. D. Smith, Jr., of Richmond, Va., carried home with him his local board the Chicago Jr., the trophy annually presented to the victor in the home town speech contest. Contenders for the award at Toronto will be: George Harrison, Atlanta Real Estate Board; Donald L. Chamberlin, Washington, D. C. Real Estate Board; Merle Smith, the Real Estate Board of Kansas City, Mo.; W. H. Briggs, Boise, Idaho, Real Estate Board; Edward Wallace, Oakland, Cal., Real Estate Board; C. E. Redeker, Border Cities Real Estate Board, Windsor, Canada; John B. Cook, Flint, Mich., Real Estate Board; J. Mervil Silk, Pittsburgh, Pa., Real Estate Board; Edgar Winn, Norfolk, Va., Real Estate Board, and Godfrey K. Preiser, Board of Realtors of the Oranges and Maplewood, East Orange, N. J.

Organizing efficient machinery through which the property owner can be heard in tax legislation, to the end that real estate levies will be more equitable, will be the keynote of the meeting of the property owners' division of the national association at the annual convention.

Leading realtors and owners of real estate feel that organized groups of property owners are essential in both the large city and the small town to meet present public questions affecting real estate, and at the meeting of the national property owners' division there will be extensive discussions from leaders in local property owner groups who have been organized in large cities and in smaller cities. Edwin H. Forkel, president of the Oak Park, Ill. Real Estate Board, will speak on "Property Owners' Divisions in Smaller Cities."

The Oak Park board has organized its property owners' division with a view to three-way membership—local representation through the real estate board, state representation through the state association of real estate boards, and national representation through the national association.

Federation founded by the late Mrs. Albert Branswell. "Laborers together with God."—1 Cor. 3:9.

Lest We Forget.

The God who manifestly presided at the foundation of this republic has watched over this nation with a marvelously beneficent providence. No nation has ever enjoyed such boundless and varied blessings. But if these blessings are God's answer to the prayers of our fathers they are also the supreme test of our own generation. It is always possible to lose a heritage by betrayal of the covenant that secures it. America's future depends upon America's loyalty to Christ and further application of His teachings.

"Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, Lest we forget, lest we forget."

Christian Woman's Council Holds Annual Installation Service

The Woman's Council of the First Christian church held its annual installation service last Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. C. L. Stauffer acting as officer in charge. The service was impressive throughout. Mrs. Newton Fowler sang "Open Mine Eyes," followed by a dedicatory prayer and a charge to the officers, with closing song, "Have Thine Own Way Lord," after which the regular monthly missionary program was presented by group No. 1. Miss Lucille Dyerle and Miss Lucille Moore sang a duet, after which Mrs. Robert Cunningham gave a most interesting talk on "Missions in Korea."

The following are the officers installed for the coming year: President, Mrs. Chester E. Martin; vice president, Mrs. G. W. Harlan; recording secretary, Mrs. Newton Fowler; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Roy McClellan; auditor, Mrs. W. T. James; group leaders, Mesdames J. C. Ewing, Charles Bright, Ellen Hargrove, C. A. Brown, M. H. Cooper, Charles Simmons, George Crawford, J. H. Bush, H. D. Bolles, R. E. Caldwell, Clyde Burch and H. C. Phillips.

Mrs. D. J. Guy led the devotional service, which included a flag song by little Miss Margaret Holman. Mrs. Sam Johnson was dressed in Korean costume. Preceding the installation service the executive committee met and outlined the year's work.

Linn, assisted by the following: Miss Hattie Grace Exley, Miss Florie Zeigler, Miss Meale Grovenstein, Miss Willie Mae Overstreet and Mrs. J. D. Zeigler, from Jerusalem church, Ebenezer; Miss Winifred Gann, Miss Bertha Gann and Miss Essie Gann, of Grace church, Stillwell; Mrs. F. B. Counts, of Zion pastorate; Mrs. J. M. Natchman and Mrs. J. W. Hawk, of Holy Trinity church, Springfield; Mrs. J. G. E. Struck, Mrs. H. A. Durham, Miss Lottie Lang, Mrs. P. G. Schaffer and Mrs. H. H. Kuck, of the Church of the Ascension, Savannah.

At 1:30 o'clock a lunch was spread under the great oaks surrounding the church. The afternoon period opened at 2:30 o'clock with the singing of the hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers Living Still," followed with prayer by Mrs. H. H. Kuck, after which studies were continued, concluding at 4:30 o'clock. An invitation was extended by the Women's Missionary Society, of Springfield, to assemble again under the great oaks. Ice cream and cake was served.

Shower for Baptist Orphans Will Be Given September 26

Mrs. W. P. Anderson, the executive assistant to the manager of the Baptist Orphan's Home at Hapeville, where approximately 350 children are cared for physically, mentally and spiritually.

The annual linen shower given to the children of the Georgia Baptist Orphan's Home by the Woman's Missionary Union of the Atlanta association will be held at the home Friday, September 26, from 3 to 5 o'clock, according to an announcement by Mrs. George Westmoreland, president of the board of trustees of the home. Members of the young people's organizations as well as Woman's Missionary Societies will be welcomed. This will afford a fine opportunity to get acquainted with the fine boys and girls of this institution and help a most worthy cause.

Mrs. James Kempton, chairman of personal service for the Atlanta W. M. U., will have charge of the shower and under her direction it is an assured success. In these days of financial stress the need for generosity on the part of Georgia Baptists is great and it is therefore desirable for persons outside of Atlanta to join in the shower, which will be held at the home at Hapeville Wednesday, August 6.

W. M. U. BOARD COMMITTEES NAMED.
Standing committee to conduct the work of the executive board of the Baptist Woman's Missionary Union for the next conventional year were appointed by the president, Mrs. W. J. Neel, of Cartersville, at Tuesday's meeting of the board. These committees are: Young People's committee, Miss Mary Christian, Mrs. Gordon Singleton, Mrs. B. B. Mayfield, Miss Clara Stephenson, emergency, Mrs. George Westmoreland, Mrs. J. H. Zachry, Mrs. B. L. Bugg, Mrs. E. C. Laird; vacancy, Mrs. L. B. Smith, Mrs. W. T. Henry; devotion, Mrs. T. H. Stewart; assistant training school trustee, Mrs. John Thompson. With expressions of appreciation for the splendid work of the past year, Mrs. Flippin Burge was re-elected recording secretary of the board.

Two new state officers, elected at the recent Forsyth convention, were present Tuesday and welcomed into the union's official family. These were Mrs. E. M. Bailey, of Acworth, state superintendent of mission society, and Mrs. W. T. Henry, of Atlanta, state chairman of Margaret fund. Newly elected local board members receiving greeting were Mrs. B. R. Beck, Mrs. Gordon Weekley and Mrs. R. B. Mayfield.

Mission Institute.
A mission study institute was conducted by Mrs. Bailey last week at Norcross, with 52 interested mission study leaders enrolled in classes. Teaching in this institute were Mrs. Bailey, Mrs. W. J. Neel and Mrs. J. W. Willis, assisted by Mrs. A. J. Johnson and Mrs. W. D. Flowers, of Point training school trustee, and Mrs. R. B. Mayfield.

Mrs. W. T. Henry is making an especial plea for gifts of "Margarets" to the Margaret fund for the education of the children of foreign missionaries. Briefly outlined this project, sponsored by the southern union, is as follows: All W. M. U. members bearing the now-distinguished name of Margaret, or wishing to honor some relative or friend of this name, are asked to make a love gift of $2 to this fund. These names will be inscribed in a Margaret fund book and the money will be added to the education fund. The first "Margarets" in Georgia were contributed by Mrs. Wilbur Jones, superintendent of the Atlanta association, and Mrs. A. F. McMahon, state executive secretary. "Margarets" may be sent to Mrs. W. T. Henry, 940 Waverly, of the north central division reported a W. M. S. recently organized in the Gilmer-Fannin association. This being the first woman's missionary organization in this association, the announcement was received with especial gladness. Official reports were made by Mrs. J. C. Lanier, of West Point, training school trustee, and Mrs. L. O. Freeman, of College Park, state chairman of publicity.

Story Telling Contest.
A statewide story-telling contest will be held Monday evening at Bessemer college sponsored by Miss Mary Christian and the department of young people. A silver trophy cup has been offered by Mrs. A. F. McMahon for the winner in the contest. Only representatives from "A-1" girls auxiliaries are eligible to compete in this contest. The contest will be held the week at Bessemer Tift college where the annual statewide "G. A." house party is now in progress. Outstanding figures at this house party are Mrs. W. J. Neel, state B. W. M. U. president; Miss Emma Leachman, field worker of the home mission board, and Mrs. C. K. Doss, missionary on furlough from Japan. Miss Christian, young people's leader, is director of the house party. Young people's councils and conferences attended by Miss Christian during June were those held at McRae, Danville, Dublin, Jeffersonville, Eastman, Rockmart, West Point and Lavonia.

The annual assembly at Blue Ridge will be held August 1-8. The assembly program will include mission study classes taught by Mrs. Neel, Mrs. Bailey and Miss Christian. Morning watch devotionals will be led by Mrs. Carter Wright, of Alabama, a well-known leader in the work of the southern union.

The next regular meeting of the executive board will be held at the Baptist Tabernacle Tuesday, September 2. No session will be held in August. The annual all-day meeting is announced for October 7, when the board will be the guests of the board of trustees of the Andrew and Frances Stewart day nursery. This meeting will be held at the nursery and board members from all sections of the state are asked to attend.

Members present Tuesday were Mesdames W. J. Neel, Mrs. George Westmoreland, J. C. Lanier, A. F. McMahon, E. C. Laird, B. L. Bugg, E. M. Bailey, Gordon Singleton, W. T. Henry, R. B. Mayfield, Gordon Weekley, B. R. Beck, E. G. Walton, John Thompson, Roger Howell, T. H. Stewart, Flippin Burge, J. H. Zachry, L. O. Freeman and Miss Clara Stephenson.

MERCER AUXILIARY HAS BEEN FORMED.
A new feature of the ever enlarging program of Mercer—the great Baptist university of Georgia—is the organization of the Mercer Auxiliary which was effected on Mother's Day, May 11. Mrs. A. P. Montague writes interestingly of the auxiliary in the Christian Index of June 26 and says: "The object of the organization is to enlist the interest and influence of the women of the state in behalf of the nearest representative of Mercer University."

"There are many things our women may do for our school," she writes. "We can interest young men in attending Mercer and there are many ways in which we can make their stay at the University more homelike, pleasant and profitable."

"Officers for the year are as follows: President, Mrs. Ben S. Thompson, Madison; vice president, Mrs. Columbus Roberts, Columbus; secretary-treasurer, Mrs. A. P. Montague, Macon.

The vice presidents of the B. W. M. U. are the key women in their divisions and they will be ably assisted by others.

"The first objective of the organization is the furnishing of entrance and reception room of Sherwood Hall. These conveniences are greatly needed and will be for the use of all Mercer men and their guests and be just those living in Sherwood hall."

"At the recent meeting of the B. W. M. U. the cause of the Mercer Auxiliary was presented and a drive for membership was begun. The women responded enthusiastically and 90 names were enrolled. The divisional vice presidents have this drive in their hands and the drive will be continued until all our women have an opportunity to join. Those enrolled before August 1 will be regarded charter members. The membership fee is $1 for the year."

"Any woman in Georgia is eligible for membership and in order to make sure of being enrolled as a charter member you will please get in touch with the nearest representative of the Auxiliary in your division or write direct to Mrs. A. P. Montague, secretary-treasurer, Macon, Ga., enclosing the necessary enrollment fee of $1. Each enrollment will be credited to the proper division."

Mrs. Paul Etheridge, 33 Maddox drive, Atlanta, has been appointed chairman for the Mercer Auxiliary fund for the north central division of B. W. M. U. of Georgia. The number of charter members apportioned to this division is 50 and it is earnestly desired that at least that number will respond promptly with the registration fee of $1 by sending the amount to Mrs. Etheridge not later than August 1.

CONFEDERATE AVE. W. M. S. MEETS.

An interesting group of women of the Confederate Avenue Baptist W. M. S. met at the home of the pastor, Rev. E. L. Dyer, and Mrs. Bawlow, 2160 Ridgedale road, Wednesday, July 2, to study the home mission book, "Look Upon the Fields," by Mrs. Una Roberts Lawrence, mission study editor of the home mission board of the Southern Baptist convention. Those present were Mesdames V. R. Butterworth, J. L. Benton, H. E. Sears, E. L. Barlow, J. Russell Gringer and Charles Deunmond. Luncheon was served. Arrangements were made for the day's study by Mrs. L. C. Craig, secretary of the third district, Confederate Avenue being one of the societies under the supervision of Mrs. Craig.

MRS. T. L. LEWIS MAKES REQUEST.
Mrs. T. L. Lewis, chairman of the memory book committee, requests officials of the Atlanta Baptist Association to have their pictures made during this vacation time for the memory book.

"Each of them deserves a place in this book that will make history for those who follow them," she says. "The book is pretty and we wish the contents to be equally so. We are not asking for any unusual artistic finish. We want you just as we know you to be faithful and true. We wish others to know of your loyalty to the trust given you. Do not fail to report the activities of your district. Encourage the young people to do so. I am thinking of you this vacation time and hoping for the best from each district."

MORGANTON SCHOOL HOLDS CONVENTION.
The Morganton Sunday school convention was held Sunday, June 23, in Morganton at Morganton Baptist church. Miss Ruth Jinks, field worker of the north central division of the B. W. M. U. of Georgia reports a well attended meeting with a program participated in by Pastors J. P. Aaron, C. C. L. Ray, J. A. Ammons and Dr. W. L. Cuts, Dr. O. P. Gilbert, pastor of the Christian Index, made the principal address. Miss Ruth Green, of the Mary P. Williamson church, Blue Ridge, spoke of "The Method of Teaching," and Miss Ruth Eubanks' subject was "How to Maintain an Evergreen Sunday School."

Blind May Get Religious Books From Braille Library, Richmond

Miss Ida V. Rhoad, former field worker of the Baptist Woman's Missionary Union of Georgia, submits the following article:

Since many of the blind have not known the Braille circulating library, I am writing to let them know of it. It is a building, Richmond, Va., and since it is available to all without fee and without even postage, they will be interested to learn that it contains devotional reading of the most helpful character. The books are all by James H. McKim, and few have the power to write such to make them so clear and simple. They have been the means of transforming the lives of many discouraged blind ones and have brought to others unspeakable comfort. The only requirement is to have the name and address written on each package received.

Those not blind will also find them most inspiring. There are more than 2,000 blind in Georgia and of this number only seven are sending for these valuable books which show that they have not known of this wonderful opportunity. Please pass on this information.

GOOD WILL CENTER HAS BIBLE SCHOOL.
The annual Daily Vacation Bible school of the Andrew and Frances Stewart Good Will Center was unusually well attended this year, having 173 children enrolled, with an average attendance of 137. The school opened June 9 and closed June 27 with an appropriate program, participated in by all departments of the school.

The handwork of the various departments and the woodwork of the Junior boys was displayed. Miss Alice Lee Arendall, the director of the good will center, was principal of the school, this being the sixth school under her direction. Six of the Baptist churches of the city furnished the teachers for the school, as follows: First Baptist church, Mrs. T. H. Brannen, Miss Mildred Brannen, Miss Kathleen Johnson, Miss Adah Bentley and Mrs. Julia V. Stewart; Second Baptist church, Miss Louise Gier, Miss Edith Johnston; Druid Hills Baptist, Mrs. John Hicks, Miss Louise Akin, Mrs. E. White and Miss Mary Broughton; Jackson Hill Baptist church, Miss Elizabeth Wright; Ponce de Leon, Mrs. Quarles, Miss Elizabeth Echar; Capitol Avenue Baptist church, Miss Alma Reinhardt and Miss Katherine Patrick. The motto of the school was "Shining for Jesus," and the children especially enjoyed singing the favorite song of Andrew Stewart, the founder of the work, which was, "Keep on the Sunny Side." The mission offering goes to Miss Mattie Vie Summer in China.

CAPITOL AVE. CIRCLE MEETS.
The Business Woman's Circle of Capitol Avenue Baptist church meets Sunday, July 6, at 6:30 o'clock at the church. Rev. L. B. Cranford, of Edgewood Baptist church, will be the speaker of the evening and Miss Ethel Hanes, of Grant Park Baptist church, will give the devotional. Special music is in charge of C. E. Pittman and Miss Marlowe. All business women are extended an invitation.

FIDELIS CLASS HAS PICNIC.
An interesting affair of Thursday was the picnic at Mozley Park of the Fidelis class of the Capitol View Baptist church.

Following a short business session with the present, Mrs. F. E. Purley, presiding, lunch was served. Later in the afternoon a swim was enjoyed. Those present were Mesdames F. E. Purley, S. A. Wix, G. V. McCaskey, C. A. Agnew, A. H. Dameron, O. C. Woodward, T. A. Ratliff, J. T. Huey, C. S. Chandler, G. B. Haley, and the children especially enjoyed singing the favorite song of Andrew Stewart, the founder of the work, which was, "Keep on the Sunny Side." The mission offering goes to Miss Mattie Vie Summer in China.

State D. A. R. Chapters Meet Through Summer Months

Prominent among the interesting events of the week in Elberton was the visit of Mrs. Bun Wylie, state regent, D. A. R., to the Stephen Heard chapter. Mrs. J. Y. Swift entertained at her colonial home, Rose Hill, at an English tea honoring Mrs. Wylie. A brilliant event was a dinner party given by the chapter at the Samuel Elbert hotel. The social features given in honor of Mrs. Wylie culminated with a reception at the clubroom. The colonial idea was expressed in the following program: Solo, "Sweet Genevieve," Mrs. Ernest Kortton; "Dramatization of the History of the United States Flag," Carolyn Stapleton and Sara Rice; "George and Martha Washington," Betty McIntosh and Jane Stapleton; solo, "Last Rose of Summer," Mrs. T. D. Seymour; minuet dance, Sara Rice, Carolyn Stapleton, Mary Louise McIntosh and Jane Stapleton in costume; solo, "Love's Old Sweet Song," Mrs. Ernest Kortton.

One of the most impressive features was the installation of new officers by the state regent, Mrs. Wylie. Her charge was serious and inspirational, giving the officers a deep sense of their duties for the ensuing year. The following composed the executive board: regent, Mrs. Mary Louise Wright, vice regent, Mrs. Raymond Stapleton, secretary, Mrs. Harry Bell; treasurer, Mrs. A. F. Anderson; historian, Mrs. George Grogan; registrar, Mrs. Z. C. Hayes; auditor, Mrs. W. H. Irvin; chaplain, Mrs. Anna Duncan; Mrs. T. O. Tabor, Jr., and Mrs. S. S. Brewer, chapter representatives.

Mrs. Wylie delivered an inspiring message on "Patriotism," and enumerated the worth-while accomplishments of the Daughters of the American Revolution in the past and brought great plans for the future. Her address closed with an earnest appeal to the chapter members for greater service to the country. Mrs. Wylie was the recipient of many flowers.

John Ball chapter, D. A. R., of Irwinton, met at the home of Mrs. N. H. Bacon. Mrs. Victor Davidson, regent, presided. The work being undertaken is progressing satisfactorily and ere long the "History of Wilkes County" will be completed. We were delighted to have Mesdames Gertrude Gillespie, Maud Maddox, from Houston, Texas, and Mrs. A. B. Powell, of Atlanta; Mrs. E. V. Boone, of Toccoa; Mrs. Jack Bell, of Gordon. Miss Izzetta Davis gave a reading, and Mesdames Gertrude Curswell and L. P. Player assisted in serving.

Colonel William Candler Chapter, of Gainesville, was entertained by Mrs. Sidney O. Smith and Mrs. J. Ernest Palmour, regent, presided. Mrs. George Ashford presented a program on "Flag Day," and the chapter saluted the flag. A reading, "Origin of the Flag," was given by Mrs. William Hirsch, Jr. "Why the Flag is Called Old Glory" was given by Mrs. T. E. Sumsden. Her great-great-uncle wrote "The Star-Spangled Banner," and a musical program by Mrs. Carl Romberg and Mrs. George Ashford completed the program. Miss Ethel Lumsden, who received the Brenau scholarship that Dr. H. J. Pierce, president of Brenau college, gives each year to the Colonel William Candler chapter, expressed her appreciation of the honor conferred on her by the chapter.

Following officers were elected to serve the Hannah Clarke chapter of Quitman: Mrs. J. W. Oglesby, Jr., regent; Mrs. H. T. Brice, first vice regent; Mrs. H. W. Stubbs, second vice regent; Mrs. T. B. Fluker, recording secretary; Mrs. J. E. Young, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. L. Davidson, treasurer; Mrs. H. E. Thomas, historian; Mrs. Donald Davis, registrar, and Mrs. L. C. Chapman, parliamentarian. The board of managers include: Mesdames J. B. Tillman, Marie D. Kimble, J. M. Hubert, J. R. McMichael and L. E. Williams.

Governor John Milledge chapter, of Dalton, celebrated Flag Day at the central clubhouse with Miss Maud Hamilton then in charge of the program which had been prepared by Miss Mattie Lee Huff, second vice regent. Miss Kate Hamilton gave a toast to the flag and Miss Maud Hamilton read an account of the singing of the national anthem during a hurricane in Samoa. Miss Kate Harlan sang, accompanied by Mrs. Howard Maney.

Mesdames H. P. DeLaperriere, L. C. Allen and M. B. Allen were hostesses to the James Pittman chapter, of Commerce, at their home in Hoschton, for the June meeting.

The vice regent, Mrs. T. C. Hardman, presided. The regent, Mrs. C. E. Pittman, asked the chapter to purchase a scrap book for the historian. The chapter also voted to have George McGee and Mike Clarke for an evening's entertainment at the school auditorium the latter part of June. Mrs. J. A. Williford resigned as recording secretary and Miss Claire Anderson was elected to this office. A vote of thanks was given Mrs. M. M. Bryan, chairman of historical spots and Revolutionary soldiers' graves, for bearing the expense of placing a marker at the grave of Sherrod Thompson on the old Isabella place near Jefferson. Five dollars in gold was given Miss Caroline Burns for the highest monthly average in United States history during the school term. Her average was 85 for the nine months. Mrs. H. P. DeLaperriere stated that Mr. DeLaperriere would repair and restore the cabin that Andrew Jackson used as his headquarters during his stay in Jackson county, in the war of 1812 if the chapter would have it marked.

This cabin is on the old home place of the late Dr. DeLaperriere, just across the road from the old home. Others taking part on the program were: Mrs. M. B. Allen, Mrs. J. C. Turner, Mrs. C. E. Pittman, Miss Mozelle Marlowe and Miss Mertice Allen.

Dorothy Walton chapter, of Dawson, entertained at Cordery's mill, located 18 miles south of Dawson, one of the most picturesque places in this part of the state. The regent, Mrs. H. A. Wilkinsen, welcomed the guests and delivered a short address. Honor guests were Miss Minnie Bridges, president Mary Brantly chapter, U. D. C., Mrs. W. F. Robertson, of the D. A. R. of Greenville, S. C., and Rev.

J. M. Branch. The following new members whose papers passed when the national board met were Mrs. Sim Roberts, Mrs. J. B. Stapleton and Mrs. J. E. Toole. Each was cordially welcomed after the luncheon. Various games were enjoyed. Flag Day is always one of the most interesting celebrations for this chapter.

At the last meeting of the Fort Valley chapter of Fort Valley the following officers were elected to serve for the club year, 1930-31: Regent, Mrs. Homer Avera; first vice regent, Mrs. W. B. Norton; second vice regent, Mrs. Miles Green; recording secretary, Mrs. Oliver L. Saupp; treasurer, Mrs. J. W. Woolfolk; registrar, Mrs. E. M. Whiting; historian, Mrs. E. L. Lester; chaplain, Mrs. Lynn Fagan; parliamentarian, Mrs. W. J. Lipfert, and corresponding secretary, Miss Beale Anderson.

Hawkinsville chapter, D. A. R., celebrated Flag Day at the home of Mrs. D. L. Ryan, the program was arranged by Mrs. W. C. McAllister. Taking part were Mrs. J. L. Mims, Mrs. W. V. Bell, Mrs. G. W. Jordan and Miss Virginia Jelks. Mrs. J. L. Mims presided over the business session, at which time plans were completed for the marking of the Black-shear trail as an early date with appropriate exercises. The resignation of Mrs. E. W. Goode, Jr., the newly elected regent, was regretfully accepted by the chapter. Mrs. Goode resigned because of ill health, and Mrs. G. W. Jordan was elected regent in her place.

Henry Walton chapter, of Madison, has elected the following officers who will serve for the next two years: Regent, Miss Kitty Newton; vice regent, Mrs. Lee Trammell; treasurer, Miss Peytona Douglas; recording secretary, Mrs. Emerson H. George; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Carter Shepherd Baldwin, Jr.; historian, Mrs. Kirby Anderson; registrar, Mrs. Sue Reid Manley; chaplain, Mrs. J. E. Godfrey, and reporter, Mrs. Thomas B. Baldwin.

President-General's Message Tells of Outstanding Feature

By Ada Ramp Walden, Editor
Georgia Division, U. D. C.

In the recent message issued by Mrs. L. M. Baskin, president-general, U. D. C., a number of outstanding features are noted, the first being that of the bestowal of eight crosses of military service on army nurses, following amendment of rules governing award of this military decoration. Biloxi convention, and by which the women of this branch of service will profit.

The first to secure the crosses were Miss Lillian Alexander, Atlanta, and Miss Belle Farr, Clinton, S. C., and were awarded by the Atlanta chapter; the next four were received by Miss Margaret Bartley, Miss Rosalie Howell, Atlanta; Miss Mary Celia Johnson, Hendersonville, N. C., and Miss Jessie Cagan, Pinetta, Fla., and were awarded by the Fulton county chapter, Atlanta; the next was given Miss Pearl Tyler Ellis, of the Mary Sullivan chapter, New York; and the eighth fell to Mrs. Dorothy Haydon Conyers, Greensboro, N. C.

Mention is made of the unusually impressive service held recently in the nation's capital, "The Order of the Service for the Massing of the Colors." The president-general was represented by Miss Jessica Smith, whose father, Orrin Randolph Smith, of North Carolina, ran up the first Confederate flag that ever fluttered in the breeze. The Colonial Dames, the D. A. R. and U. D. C. were all in line of march, presenting a most spectacular procession.

The death of Mrs. E. E. Moffitt, of Richmond, is chronicled by Mrs. Baskin in her message. For a number of years this patriotic woman had directed the affairs of the Mary Association, bringing about the materialization of her dream and witnessing the unveiling of the monument to Matthew Fontaine Maury in Richmond a few months ago. For many years she had directed other important movements in the work to which she was consecrated, but that this crowning achievement materialized after she had passed her 90th birthday is indeed a memorial to her untiring and unquenchable enthusiasm which was manifested until she "folded her hands in the rest eternal."

July 1: The first vacation month of the United Daughters of the Confederacy! Practically all chapters cease their activities in that they hold no meetings during the summer months, although the various committees keep the reins of their respective work well in hand. One of the phases of the work emphasized for this month is the observance of the birthday of Miss William Rufus Ford, July 16. Mrs. H. M. Franklin, program chairman, has suggested as a subject "The Villa, the Home of Miss Rutherford; Life of Miss Rutherford, and Memorial to Miss Rutherford, as Planned by the U. D. C."

Mrs. C. H. Myers was named president of the Queman chapter at its last meeting, other officers being Mrs. Denmark Groover, first vice; Mrs. C. T. Tillman, registrar; Mrs. A. L. Tidwell, recording secretary; Mrs. J. B. Tillman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Ben Pettus, treasurer; Mrs. S. Rountree, historian. Mrs. Myers succeeded Mrs. R. L. Weston, who had faithfully served as president for the past two years. Report was made of the awarding of essay prizes to Mahel Garrett, high school; Carolyn Whipple, junior high. One of the outstanding phases of work of this chapter is its scholarship fund by which local boys and girls continue their education after leaving high school. At present this fund is $800.83, $874.70 now being out on loan. That four boys and six girls have been beneficiaries of this fund was reported at the annual meeting, and the chapter promptly voted to raise the fund to $1,000. The chapter has just completed a scrap book, under the chairmanship of Mrs. J. W. Haddock, which will be preserved in city library, since it contains many valuable records pertaining thereto. Among the worth-while projects completed and reported at this meeting were the placing of a set of shelves in the public library for its records and a substantial sum given for illiteracy work.

The presence of a number of Children of the Confederacy at the last meeting of the Woodland chapter lent additional interest to the program, little Miss Frances King delivering with zeal and fervor "Your Flag and My Flag," while Miss Annie Clark gave charming renditions of songs of southern melodies. Sketches of the life of President Davis were given by John Pye, Jr., Miss Margaret Woodall and Henry Gene Seay. The program was climaxed by the two favorite hymns of Mr. Davis, played by Miss Annie Clark. Three out-of-town guests were welcomed: Mrs. Homer Dennis, Springfield, Mo.; Mrs. S. J. Jarrell, Macon; Mrs. Thomas Ferguson, Tallabot.

June meeting of the Willie Hunt Smith chapter, Barnesville, was given over to the memorializing of members and veterans who have passed on during the year, June 3 being dedicated as the "day of memory" by this chapter. The meeting was conducted by the chairman, Mrs. R. L. Swatts, Mrs. J. M. Abshire, a tribute to the three who had "laid life's armor down"—Mrs. Catherine Whitaker, Mrs. Emma Tyler Blalock and W. J. Gordy. The last named was one of the few remaining veterans of Lamar county and a highly esteemed resident of Barnesville, never failing in attendance at memorial exercises of the U. D. C. Mrs. Whitaker was the widow of Colonel W. S. Whitaker, a Confederate veteran, and the mother of Mrs. Milton Smith, an active member of the chapter. Mrs. Blalock was a charter member and gave untiringly of her time and efforts in making the chapter one of the best rated in the division. Following the memorial program Mrs. Willis, the president, resumed the chair, when annual reports of the chairmen were heard. Announcement was made that a meeting would be held in July, the birthday of Miss Rutherford might be observed, when there will be a reception also to the members who have joined during the past year.

Mrs. Ashby To Give Psychology Lecture

Tebbetts Is Made Chief of Staff For Fourth Corps

Saturday, July 5, marked the first change in almost four years in the position of chief of staff, fourth corps area, when Colonel Duncan K. Major,

COLONEL HARRY H. TEBBETTS, Jr., turned over his duties to Colonel Harry H. Tebbetts at Fort McPherson.

Colonel Major, who had served as the executive to four major-generals commanding the fourth corps area, during his tenure of office over almost four years, goes to command the 29th infantry at Fort Benning. Over this period of time he has visited, observed and inspected practically every army activity in the eight southeastern states and has become well known to thousands of national guardsmen, organized reserve and military training camps and reserve officers.

As chief of staff Colonel Tebbetts will bear the same relation to Major-General Frank R. McCoy, the fourth corps area commander, as the executive of a large concern bears to its president. However, few commercial concerns cover as extended a territory and touch the lives of as many individuals in all walks of life.

Colonel Tebbetts began his military career as a cadet at the United States Military academy in 1902 and was commissioned a second lieutenant of infantry in 1903. After being promoted to colonel in 1929 he transferred in 1922 to the adjutant-general's department, in which he has since served. He was a distinguished graduate of the infantry-cavalry school in 1905, a graduate of the staff college in 1906, and of the army war college in 1909 and 1922. Previously he had served on the general staff in 1911 and 1912 and again from 1917 to 1918.

He has been honored by a silver star citation and the award of a distinguished service medal. In France his efficient services were particularly conspicuous, for which he was awarded the later, the citation of which reads as follows:

"As chief of staff, G-2, of the service of supply, he demonstrated marked energy and executive ability in the management of troop evacuation from France and especially in the maintenance of the armistice in the repatriation of the American expeditionary forces, when several hundred thousand men were returned to the United States each month. He has rendered services of great value."

And that among the beautiful monuments erected the past year at Gettysburg, was North Carolina's magnificent memorial? It is described as sublime in its beauty, and was erected at the cost of $80,000, $10,000 of the sum being given by the U. D. C.

And that the Missouri division has given the sum of $1,000 to the Robert E. Lee Memorial Association for the preservation of Stratford? And that when the Missouri Daughters undertook to "say it with flowers" by beautifying Confederate Memorial park, that he who "files may read" to, the government located a million and a half dollar transcontinental airport just opposite the park? So now, the citizens of the world may read the story of the Confederate heroes of Missouri!

And that up in classical Boston, of the state of Massachusetts, there are 32 boys and girls enrolled as members of the Children's chapter, C. of C. And that one of the Boston chapter's beautiful ceremonies was held the past year at the home of Mrs. Sayre, daughter of the late Woodrow Wilson, when she was given a cross of military service in memory of her illustrious father.

And that the legislature of Colorado enacted a law whereby a person who had resided in the state for 35 years was entitled to a pension of $25 a month, if indigent or infirm; and that the Robert E. Lee chapter, U. D. C., of Denver, never ceased in its efforts until this year, when it was granted a Confederate veteran residing in that city?

And, lastly, that it was the William Alexander, Jr., chapter, of Greenwich, Conn., that has carried its name in history by boldly seeking the preservation of Stratford—a call that has re-echoed through the land until it has been answered by 30 states?

Book Reviews in Tabloid

NEW FICTION.

"Of King David and the Philistine Boys." By Boak Brodard. A sequel to "The Green Pastures." The book is dramatized by Marc Connelly as "The Green Pastures," the play having been a great success on the New York stage.

In "Of King David" a most interesting story is told about the "children of Canaan" who were running around so wild that the Lord had to take steps about it. The Biblical characters are interpreted in the dialect of a negro preacher, and the author who was born on a Mississippi plantation found no trouble in describing how they worked in the fields, employed the lunch hour, the church festivities, picnics and life on the river at the levee camps.

The lovers of American folklore will find this a most interesting story. The old southern dandy is fast passing away but he will ever be remembered as tried and true. (Harper and Brothers, New York.)

The Datchley Inheritance. By Stephen McKenna. Author of "Sonia." The author tells a story of adventure. It is full of wit and humor and originality. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

Jenny. The Romance of a Nurse. By Norma Patterson. An entertaining story which a most lovable nurse in her white uniform is the central figure. The daily sayings, "Jenny, you're a brick," "Jenny, you're a real original sweetheart," and "I'll take Jenny for mine," could be heard here and there. It tells the world what the boys at Veterans' Hospital thought of Jenny. (Farrar & Rinehart, New York.)

Scandal Sheets. A novel based on the life of a New York reporter, the first yellow journalist. By E. R. Conde. It is a fictionalized history of the first yellow journalist. (G. Howard Watt, publisher, New York.)

The Immediate Family. A Novel of the Modern Woman. By Nalbro Bartley. The setting of this story is a little American town where there are plenty of water power and factories, not much else but restlessness and nerves. (Farrar & Rinehart, New York.)

Captured. By Ferdinand Huxley Horvath. The author is a Hungarian officer, who tells a thrilling story of his experiences during the world war. (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

Windfall's Eve. An Entertainment by E. V. Lucas. There are many entertaining books on the market at the present time, but this sporting story by Mr. Lucas is interesting from the first to the last chapter. (Harper & Bros., New York.)

Author Unknown. By Clemence Dane and Helen Simpson. The former is the author of "Enter St. John," the readers of which will not soon forget Miss Dane's clever style. In this story the cast of which is interesting that charming place which is called The Bouganville, and which is not unknown to the Americans who visit London. (Cosmopolitan Book Corporation, New York.)

The Six Proud Walkers. By Francis Beeding. Author of "The Seven Sleepers." If the reader is familiar with the book written by the author who he will thoroughly enjoy of the man who encountered six on the Italian highway. From this you will note that the author has Italy for its setting. (Little Brown & Co., Boston.)

Payment in Full. A glowing romance of the West Indies. By Elizabeth Carling. Author of "The Distant Stars." This is a story of love, sacrifice and suffering. The story is located in Havana. (Harper & Brothers, New York.)

One Woman's War. The book is dedicated to Dora Louise Miller, Helen Bennett, Mary Agnes Leonard, Ethel Wynne and Norma Abrams, "for their loyal friendship and understanding during those trying days. This is a war story. It is a story told by a woman who served as a nurse and in the army." (Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.)

Fund To Entertain Vets Of Camp Gordon Launched

UNKNOWN FRIEND SENDS $5 TO CONSTITUTION

In order to "start the ball rolling," an unknown friend of the famous 82nd division has forwarded to The Constitution a $5 bill as the first contribution to a fund for the entertainment of members of the unit which was trained at Camp Gordon in 1917-18 when they returned to Atlanta in September for a re-uniforming.

Again Camp Gordon, the tented city of war days, will be charged with excitement—but not the serious kind. But the 82nd division will be broken when the division was demobilized after it had fought with marked valor in the great offensive against the German army.

General George B. Duncan, who was commanding general of the division, will be here—it has been announced and an invitation has been extended to Sergeant Alvin York, the solo lad who herded a car load of Heintjes together and delivered them, under his own guard, into an American prison camp.

Scott Candler has been named president of the Atlanta association of the 82nd and will be in direct charge of all arrangements made between now and September 26, the date for the reunion. Other officers of the Atlanta association, who will assist Mr. Candler in arranging for the thousands expected to return this fall, are Trammell Scott, vice president; Joe R. Cook, vice president; James L. Banks, treasurer; W. F. Middlebrook, secretary; James L. R. Boyd, historian, and Howard Glenn, chaplain.

The Constitution will receive funds to add to the $5 bill in order that the city may extend to its own division a great welcome.

Blood Mountain Memorial Project Winning Success

Gratifying reception of the American Legion's campaign to raise $25,000 for erection of a monument to Georgia's deceased World War veterans on Blood Mountain, a scenic spot rich in the legends of Mars, is reported by B. H. Lufurrow, state chairman of the memorial committee.

Funds are being raised through donations of friends and souvenir pictures of the mountain. The state sacrifice are given to those donors who contribute $25 or more. Dr. C. M. Strahan, dean of the engineering school of the University of Georgia, is contributing his services as architect.

The campaign will close September 30, the committee feeling that within this time the necessary funds for the only memorial of this country to World War veterans will have been raised. An appropriate tablet, containing the names listed alphabetically by counties of those Georgians who gave their lives in the war to end wars, will be placed in the memorial.

Blood Mountain is two and a half miles by graded trail from Neal's Gap, and about 100 miles from Atlanta on paved road number 1. It is 4,460 feet above sea level and the third highest peak in Georgia. Blood Mountain and approximately 168 acres of scenic beauty in and around Neal's Gap are owned by the state of Georgia.

Local mythology has it that Blood and Slaughter mountains got their names from a fierce battle between the Creek and Cherokee Indian tribes. A small party of Creeks were caught hunting on Blood and were driven out by the Cherokees. The Creeks came back with all available brave and met the Cherokees on Blood Mountain. The battle, according to

Business Shows Signs of Revival

Business is showing signs of a sharp revival, in the opinion of Cotton Mather, member of the firm of Mather Brothers, 220 Peachtree street. The company operates ten stores in Florida, and business there this year has shown a decided increase in comparison with last year.

The total sales of the Florida stores for June, Mr. Mather says, made a gain of 143 per cent over the sales of June 1929. Large gains were also registered for the two preceding months. April showed an increase of 26 per cent over the corresponding month of last year, and May showed a gain of 30 per cent.

Society Set Dons Cotton Frocks.

The call of the great open spaces to the woman of society is responsible, no doubt, for the number of effective cotton frocks being worn this summer. On one of the hottest days of last week Mrs. Henry Hirsch motored down from Lakemont to Atlanta, clad in the smartest blue and white cotton frock imaginable. A pleated ruffle of white batiste outlined the round neck and it was hemmed with blue thread, the exact shade of the blue flowers ornamenting the white background. A becoming, rather broad brimmed white hat of bako straw and white canvas shoes completed the effective outfit. Mrs. Hirsch gleefully boasted that the dress cost $4.95 and was bought at a local shop. It seems that cottons have it this year. Mrs. William T. Healey has included in her summer wardrobe several of the smartest white pique sports models, fashioned sleeveless. She dons jackets made of colored pique when she elects to motor into town from her Andrews drive residence to do a bit of shopping or have luncheon in some club cafe. Mrs. Healey was the cynosure of all eyes whenever she appeared arrayed thusly on the Tom Thumb golf course at the Lookout Mountain Club, the ren-derous for prominent southerners this summer.

Mrs. Deloney Sledge was dashing in blue and rose print, scattered on a white background, belted at the waistline, and worn with a white straw hat and white shoes, the costume having an appropriate place in the seasonal wardrobe. She made a foursome at bridge with Mrs. Howard Candler, Jr., Mrs. Joseph S. Raine, Jr., and Mrs. Greene Warren, who play contract every once a week

MISS BROYLES AND MR. PUND TO WED

In Mrs. Candler's Peachtree road apartment.

A charming Gainesville visitor, Miss Katherine Redwine, recent guest of Mrs. William Warren, Jr., cut and made the most alluring pink gingham frock with belted waistline, taut hip, flaring skirt, short sleeves, cape collar and several other feminine details. Miss Redwine, it will be recalled, was "Miss Gainesville" in the American Legion Auxiliary convention.

Another bride devotee of the cotton dress fad is Mrs. Evelyn Harris, who played in a bridge game one day recently at the Piedmont Driving Club, wearing a practical and becoming frock of dark blue swiss, dotted in white. She alternates this costume with another of white swiss dotted in rose color, which answers for morning bridge games and informal spend-the-day parties.

Stunning, indeed, was Mrs. Phinix Calhoun, costumed in white plume, a green felt hat, green suede belt and green shoes adding the dashing and contrasting accompaniment to her toilette. Mrs. Calhoun was noted in the shopping district arrayed in this becoming outfit.

Swimming Pool Gossip From the Fort.

The swimming pool at Fort McPherson has taken on all the color of a summer resort with slim, graceful mermaids and chubby water babies arrayed in brilliant hued swimming suits, diving and splashing in the clear water or obtaining a becoming sun tan on the banks. The group of sub-dubs of the military set are to be seen there daily taking a swim, and members of garrison pause in their rides through the tempting bridge paths of the reservation to watch some especially well executed swan dive or jack knife flip. Marjorie Ripley, with her curls confined in a crimson cap, has a graceful stroke, and diminutive Doris Macklin, in a black sun suit and a silver cap, is an excellent swimmer. Little Billy Holliday, who was the inspiration for a birthday party given yesterday by his particular friend, Mrs. Frank Ross McCoy, is one of the youngest delighting in the cooling waters. Recently, one of the attractive officers, with the rank of major, a popular member of the military contingent, was poised on the spring board for a perfect dive when a pretty sub-dub dashed from the bath house and fixing him with commanding eye, called: "Major, you go home right this minute. Do you hear me?" The spectators wondered. His

Mrs. Palmer Crowned Queen At Convention.

To think of an Atlanta as queen of the Mardi Gras ball would be unheard of. But to hear of an Atlanta who was queen of a similar function which featured the annual convention of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers at Biloxi, Miss., June 9-14, seems quite natural and fitting. Mrs. Charles F. Palmer, of Woodcrest avenue, was the central figure at this interesting affair, having been selected by the New Orleans association, which sponsored the ball. Mr. Palmer was elected president of the national association at the meeting.

Mrs. Palmer joined the king of the ball, Paul Robertson, of Indianapolis, Ind., at the throne in the ballroom of a local hotel where the affair was held, gowned in a mantle that was magnificent indeed. The gorgeous green and white satin mantle, edged with a band of sequins, formed a 12-foot court train falling from the shoulders of the white chiffon gown which she wore. At the back of the neck the mantle formed a tall wall of silver lace. In the center of the train was an embossed basket of cloth of silver, from which fell an artistic arrangement of artificial flowers. Around her neck Mrs. Palmer wore a diamond necklace offset with a crown of sapphires and pearls.

In the gala procession which featured the ball the dukes, arrayed in white, preceded first. They were followed by the maids and then the queen, who joined the king at the improvised throne. Mrs. Palmer has attended several conventions of the organization, having been present in Montreal, Canada, and Del Monte, Cal., where the last two meetings were held.

Mrs. Henry B. Scott Fetes Mrs. Stolzman.

Mrs. Henry Bernard Scott was hostess to four tables of bridge yesterday afternoon at the Piedmont Driving Club in compliment to her guest, Mrs. Ludwik Stolzman, of Warsaw, Poland. Garden flowers were used in decorating the tables and the card game prizes were awarded the holders of high scores in auction and contract and were attractive pieces of Rookwood. The honor guest was presented with a combination cigarette lighter and snuffer as a memento of the occasion.

State W. C. T. U. President Declares July 13 Day of Prayer

By M. Frances Meaders Burghard.
State president of the Georgia Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Marvin Williams, of Barnesville, has set aside Sunday, July 13, for a day of special prayer by her constituency and friends. Noontide is the daily trysting time with God of W. C. T. U. members, when each of them the world over is expected to lift her heart to God in prayer for His blessings on the work and workers, and the overthrow of the liquor system and its allies—to pray whether alone or in company, in the closet or in the street for God's blessing on the temperance work. Some occasions call for special prayer, and often a state organization of the W. C. T. U., and sometimes the entire nation unites in prayer at a given day or hour for a definite purpose.

One of the more than 20 departments operated by the W. C. T. U. is that of legislation, for since its beginning its policy has been: Wherever the liquor traffic is entrenched, there put in an appearance and send the ammunition of the temperance fighting gun along the entire field. Where the liquor traffic is entrenched in the customs of society—go after it with the pledge of total abstinence for others sake. Where the liquor traffic is protected by people's ignorance—go after it into the Sunday schools and public schools with a "Thus saith nature, thus saith reason, thus saith the Lord." Where the liquor traffic is safeguarded by law, or its prohibition threatened by law go after the lawmakers or destroyers, by working for the election of those who are dry, and actively opposing those who are wet. Laws are made by men, not by abstractions. Congress alone can change the prohibition law.

Day of Prayer.
Mrs. Williams says: "Again we face a most insidious attack on the prohibition law through the candidacy for office of several wet men. Shall Georgia be shamed before the nation by being represented at Washington by one or more anti-prohibitionists in this crisis time of our government? We hereby call upon the white ribbon women of the state to engage in a special season of prayer on Sunday, July 13, definitely asking the Good Father to guide the forces of righteousness in the several wet and dry fights in which the voters of Georgia are now engaged and which will culminate at the ballot box on September 10, 1930. Pray for leadership. Pray for consecrated service on the part of those upon whom the Lord must depend in every community. Reconciliate yourselves to the task of keeping Georgia and the nation dry. Pray through!"

Dry Celebration.
"This being the month for the Christian citizenship program, we have decided to make it a jubilee celebration of Georgia's going dry in every local union," says Mrs. Mary Scott Russell, state director of citizenship. July 30 will be the 23d anniversary of the passage of Georgia's prohibition law. We plan to have a big rally at Grace Methodist church in Atlanta at 8 o'clock in the evening, with Mrs. Mary Harris, Hon. Senborn Wright, also Governor Hardman and Judge Covington, the joint authors of the bill, present. We believe that the reviewing of this thrilling incident in the history of the Georgia W. C. T. U. by Mrs. Ansley will enthrall the present membership as nothing else could do, and it will be especially significant just now, when we are threatened with wet candidates for the senate and congress. Get material for your speaker from the history and from the Georgia W. C. T. U. bulletin for July and invite any of the legislators to attend your meeting and give a talk, and also invite them to be present at the celebration in Atlanta July 30. We would like to have as many as possible of those who voted for the bill on the stage that night."

Such are the instructions which Mrs. Russell has sent to unions all over the state. She suggests as the slogan for these local programs: Vote and work for dry candidates for every office and for the Scripture lesson, Isaiah 9:8 and Psalms 28:28; also that a children's chorus sing "America."

Expressions of sympathy are being tendered Mrs. John W. Miss Johnson and Mr. Etheridge Will Wed July 8 in Mars Hill, N.C.

Plans for the wedding of Miss Laura Bruce Johnson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Walt N. Johnson, of Mars Hill, N. C., to Paul S. Etheridge, Jr., of Atlanta, are of interest. The marriage will be solemnized at 6:30 o'clock Tuesday evening, July 8, at the home of the bride-elect's parents in Mars Hill. Dr. Johnson, a well-known Baptist minister and author, will perform the ceremony in the presence of a gathering of relatives and friends.

Philip Etheridge, of Fitzgerald, will act as the best man. The future bride will be given in marriage by her cousin, Leonard Morgan, of Raleigh, N. C. Following a wedding trip the young couple will make their home in Atlanta.

Miss Johnson, who is a popular member of the young set of Mars Hill, has made her home in Georgia for several years, having been graduated at the Georgia Baptist hospital, Atlanta; afterward holding a responsible position at the Archibald hospital, Thomasville. She formerly attended Mars Hill college, where she was active in the life of the school. Mr. Etheridge, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul S. Etheridge, of Atlanta, is a native of that city. After receiving his primary education at Fulton High school he attended Mercer University, where he received A. B. and B. L. degrees. He is at present connected with his father in the law firm of Paul S. Etheridge and son.

Mr. Etheridge is widely connected with a well-known Georgia family. His mother before her marriage was Miss Estelle Fitzgerald, of Ocala, Ga., a popular belle of that section. His father is prominent in legal circles in the city, having practiced law in Atlanta for the past 30 years. The future bridegroom is a member of the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity, and is the junior member of the firm of Etheridge & Etheridge, well-known lawyers.

Miss Mildred Barham and Mr. Lay Wed at Edgewood Baptist Church

The marriage of Miss Mildred Irene Barham, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Barham, to Scott Lay, Jr., was beautifully solemnized last evening at the Edgewood Baptist church. The Rev. L. B. Cranford, pastor of the church, performed the ceremony in the presence of a gathering of relatives and friends.

Against the altar of the church, which was banked with palms and greenery, stood tall, seven-branched, cathedral candelabra interspersed with baskets of white gladioli. The two aisles of the church were lined with aisle posts tied with clusters of gladioli interspersed with tall lighted candles which shed a soft glow over the lovely scene.

Preceding the ceremony Mrs. Charles Maddux sang "I Love You Truly" and "Oh Promise Me." Miss Mary Lee Marlow, who accompanied her at the piano, played the "Lohengrin" wedding march for the processional and Mendelssohn's bridal chorus as the recessional.

The ushers, Joe B. Hollingsworth and J. E. Jackson, entered first followed by the groomsmen, Jack Allen, Miss Virginia Lay, sister of the bridegroom, acted as the maid of honor. Mrs. F. L. Drummond, sister of the bride, was the matron of honor. The bridesmaids were Mrs. Jesse M. Hendley and Mrs. Homer C. Groover. The attendants wore rainbow colored chiffon gowns with full ruffled skirts longer in the back than the front. They joined the tight waists at the modish high waistline. The lovely sleeveless gowns featured large bows of chiffon which held the slightly draped ruffles at the sides of the skirts. Miss Lay wore a gown of pink. Mrs. Drummond wore pale blue. Mrs. Groover yellow, and Mrs. Hendley orchid.

The junior bridesmaids, Misses Frances Drummond and Eleanor Reese, wore gowns of white net over white satin similarly fashioned. The attendants carried bouquets of roses, snapdragons and sweet peas tied with streamers of satin ribbon to match their gowns.

The lovely bride, who entered with her uncle, G. A. Winkle, by whom she was given in marriage, was met at the altar by the groom at his best man, O. Frank Taylor. She was never more lovely than in her wedding gown of sequin-studded ivory satin fashioned along princess lines. Long, light sleeves were a feature of the gown. Her misty tulle veil was caught to her hair in cap effect by a bandeau of orange blossoms. She carried a sheaf of bride's roses and lilies of the valley showered with lilies of the valley.

Little Marion and Margaret Yancey, twin daughters of Mr. and Mrs. George Yancey, were the flower girls. They wore dainty models of pink ruffled organdie and carried baskets of garden flowers. The little ring-bearer, Edwin Lay, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Lay, cousin of the bridegroom, entered wearing a white satin suit and carrying the ring on a white satin pillow.

Mrs. Barham, mother of the bride, wore a model of pink chiffon. Mrs. Scott Lay, mother of the groom, was gowned in tan chiffon. Their shoulder bouquets were of pink roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Eloise Kilpatrick Weds Mr. Printup at Home Service

The wedding of Miss Eloise Kilpatrick and Charles Luns Printup, of Memphis, Tenn., was solemnized Wednesday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents in Boulevard Park. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. Z. Tyler, of the Grace M. E. church, in the presence of friends and relatives.

Preceding the ceremony a program of nuptial music was rendered by Miss Grace Gaffney, pianist, and Mrs. J. R. Wilkinson, contralto, who sang "If I Build a World for You," by Lisa Lehmann. During the ceremony "To a Wild Rose" was softly played.

Palms banked the improvised altar at the end of the spacious living room. On either side of the altar were seven-branched cathedral candelabra holding unshaded tapers and placed in the center was a tall floor basket of white gladioli. The chandeliers and doorways were gracefully festooned with asparagus fern.

Bridal Party

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Walter Elizabeth Kilpatrick, as maid of honor. Her flock was of pink chiffon, with a fitted waist and long, full skirt with uneven hemline. She carried a bouquet of pink roses, showered with sweet peas tied with pastel ribbon. The groom's brother, Dan Printup, of Memphis, Tenn., served as best man.

The little flower girl was Miss Kathryn Ann Riordan, of Charlotte, N. C., dressed in pink point d'esprit, scattering rose petals from a basket of pastel-shaded flowers.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in her wedding gown of white chiffon, fashioned along graceful lines. Her veil of tulle was adjusted cap shape to her blonde hair and was held in place on either side with clusters of orange blossoms. An added touch of sentiment was the veil and orange blossoms which were worn by her maternal grandmother 67 years ago. She carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and valley lilies, tied with white tulle.

Following the ceremony an informal reception was held and gladioli, carrying out the color scheme of pink and white, were used in the music and dining rooms. The bride's table was overlaid with an imported lace cover, on which was placed the three-tier wedding cake. Suspended from the chandelier was a white wedding bell. Silver candelsticks holding unshaded tapers and silver bonbon dishes of mints were placed at intervals on the table.

Receiving with the bride's parents was Mrs. Henry Printup, mother of the bridegroom; Mrs. R. W. Blanton, grandmother of the bride, and members of the bridal party.

The groom's sister, Miss Sara Printup, of Memphis, wore in rose chiffon, and Miss Roberta Kilpatrick, sister of the bride, gowned in rose crepe, kept the bride's book.

The bride's mother was gowned in powder blue chiffon, with shoulder bouquet of pink rosebuds and valley lilies. The groom's mother wore French blue figured chiffon, a shoulder bouquet of pink roses and valley lilies completing the costume.

Later the bride and bridegroom left for a wedding trip through North Carolina and will make their home in Memphis, where Mr. Printup is connected with the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company.

Mrs. Printup is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Kilpatrick and has lived in Atlanta all her life. She attended Girls' High school, later taking a business course and for four years has been connected with the Gulf Refining Company. She is a member of the Tau Beta Phi national sorority. Mr. Printup is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Printup, of Memphis, formerly of Atlanta, and was born here. He graduated from Georgia Tech and is a member of the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity. He was connected with the Buckeye Cotton Oil Company here but for the past few years has been connected with their office in Memphis.

The wedding service was simple. Mrs. Robert Headley acting as the matron of honor and only attendant to the bride and Robert Headley the best man for Dr. Williams. Afterward the couple returned to the Hotel Savoy-Plaza, where they are staying while in this city. Dr. Williams would not reveal his plans for the honeymoon but said that he expected to visit Buford, Ga., the home of Mrs. Williams, in ten days.

Dr. Williams is the son of Rufus and Belle Leach Williams, of Alexandria, La., where he was born. Mrs. Williams is a native of Buford, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Allen. Her first husband died in February, 1919.

Flies From Dallas. Miss Fuller Goes by Airplane On Her First Vacation July 8

Miss Ada Fuller takes off Tuesday, July 8, from Candler field on her first vacation and also on the first trip by airplane. She will visit an uncle, Dr. Jake Fuller, in Oklahoma City, Okla., and is keenly excited over the anticipation of the twin events in her life. Photo by Leonard & Co.

By Bessie S. Stafford. Travel by air claims another enthusiast. Miss Ada Fuller, one of the matrons at the Home for Old Women, takes off from Candler field Tuesday morning at 8:30 o'clock on the first vacation she has ever had in all her life. The plane will head for Dallas, Texas, arriving there about 5:30 o'clock.

Dreamed of Vacation. Ever since she was quite young, Miss Fuller has dreamed of this vacation, which has always been denied her, because her life has been too full of other plans to spare many moments to pleasure. At the age of 16, being the oldest when her parents died, she became the official head of the family, including three brothers and five sisters. The oldest was a girl of 14 and a baby girl nine months old, was the youngest.

Miss Fuller's life has been a living example of what can be accomplished through faith, high ideals and the determination to work. She reared and educated through her own efforts, her two youngest sisters, Mrs. Roy Schuford and Mrs. H. D. Yonmans, of Atlanta.

Versatile Person. And what a versatile person Miss

Fuller is. She seems to have many ways of making a living. She was born in Brewton, Ala., and became a nurse in the Southern Industrial school there. She held the position of assistant matron in the Camp Hill school, at Camp Hill, Ala., and also lived in LaGrange, Ga., after the building of Hillside mill, where she took in sewing to provide a home for herself and dependent members of her family. She came to Atlanta six years ago, engaged in work at the Churches' Home for Girls, as assistant to the superintendent. To prove the versatility of Miss Fuller, she once was a milliner and the hats she made and trimmed, always brought good prices.

Program Announced for Parent-Teacher Institute at Athens

The following message is issued by Mrs. R. H. Hankinson, of McDonough, president of the Georgia congress of parents and teachers: Several times during the past two months reference has been made to the Parents and Teachers' Institute scheduled for July 23, 24 and 25, at the University of Georgia in Athens, and on each occasion request has been made that every association send representatives, and that expenses be defrayed from the local treasury. No investment of funds of any association can offer greater promise than the complying with this request. It means better knowledge of lines of Parent-Teacher activity, safer procedure, and consequently finer achievement. The unifying and co-ordinating influence of the institute will necessarily be dependent upon attendance, and attendance will in turn determine the character of history that will be written in the state during the next year.

Miss Waite Is Instructor Of Publix Stage Units

BY TREVA H. SHAFTO.
In Miss Jeannette Waite, talented dancer and instructor, the Publix Theater Corporation, has a most capable and competent teacher to produce new numbers and offerings for the public. Miss Waite has studied dancing since her childhood, one might almost say babyhood, days. For years she has worked ceaselessly and tirelessly to perfect her work and has gone far in her chosen field. As a tiny child she dreamed of the days when she would appear on the stage and, through her interpretative dances, give pleasure to lovers of Terpsichore. This southern girl, Virginia born and bred, did not go unnoticed, for at an early age she was chosen for a European tour as one of the internationally famous Gertrude Hoffman girls and played in Germany, France and England. Following her successful tour with the Hoffmans, Miss Waite has played in innumerable New York productions and has only recently been forced to leave the active stage work on account of ill health. Knowing Miss Waite was in day from New York city on the steamer Volendam for a two-month tour of Europe.

Mrs. John R. Slider is spending several weeks with her son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Slider, at their home in New Orleans, La.

Mrs. Nina Fish McCleskey is at the Greenbriar hotel at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. Later in the summer she will leave for West Florida recuperating, the Publix took advantage of this opportunity to secure her as an instructor for their various units. As an example of her capability, Miss Waite took a group of girls in Atlanta, who had never before worked together and on the second rehearsal day of "Valentines on Parade," the entire group knew the complete routine.

This attractive and dignified young lady takes her work most seriously and lectures her girls unstintingly to instill into them the higher ideals of showmanship. Miss Waite, herself a descendant of distinguished southern ancestry, is an exquisite and patriotic example of the heights to which the modern choline has risen from the old days when the word, showgirl, was accompanied with a raise of the eyebrows and a questionable shrug of the shoulders.

Miss Waite left last evening for New Orleans, where she will train another of the southern circuit units and following a trip to Texas, she will return to Florida, where she will join her mother, Mrs. L. P. Waite, for a well-earned rest. —T. H. S.

Shortly after picture was taken he jumped to his own death from spot where he is shown sitting. Spang climbed down to the ledge from the top of the rock, 70 feet above. He fought with his wife at the top and threw her over, then threw the children after her. All were killed by the impact, 300 feet below. A fireman at the end of a rope talked to Spang after the latter had climbed down the side of the rock to the ledge. He failed to get him to seize the rope, and watched him jump to his death. Spang, 36, was a war veteran, discharged from a hospital in the Bronx the day before the tragedy. (AP)

Look at the vital inner parts

THAT MAKE YOUR PLUMBING SYSTEM WORK...

- BELOW—A Kohler efficiency sink with swing spout faucet in the Dynamic design, equipped with Duostrainer—brings new beauty and utility to the kitchen.
- LEFT, BOTTOM—Kohler lavatory fittings in the Dynamic design—graceful and symmetrical—rapid and quiet in action.
- RIGHT, BOTTOM—The Kohler Duostrainer provides a tight water seal, a five-inch unobstructed draining area, and has a removable strainer cup.

GOOD BUILDERS today are especially careful about plumbing fixtures and fittings and accessories. They have learned that the bathroom will be looked at first . . . that the kitchen is more important than the sunporch . . . that the difference between good plumbing and doubtful plumbing will often make a sale or sign a lease.

It doesn't take a mechanical engineer to discern that difference. When you look at Kohler fixtures you see their finer design and finish. You notice their clearer, brighter, smoother surfaces—their perfection of detail. Each piece is correctly designed and correctly executed. And the quality goes straight through. The Kohler mark is a sign of careful craftsmanship, inside and out.

• Examine the working parts

The heart of your plumbing system is hidden. Here of all places, highest quality is vital—special attention on your part will be well repaid.

Kohler metal fittings are made of fine brass . . . designed as precisely as a piece of jewelry . . . cast, machined and polished with extreme care. They have fewer parts, simpler mechanisms, noticeably heavier valves, drains and connections. All these things mean easier, quieter and more positive action. All these things work for continued good service, for security.

Prevention of plumbing troubles costs far less than cure. Years of usefulness are added by an extra eighth inch of metal at the right place. Whether you plan to build or rent, an hour spent in getting inside information will show clearly why Kohler fittings avoid discomfort and even danger . . . and how they reduce up-keep to the irreducible minimum.

A Kohler four-valve shower with an engraved plate over a built-in bath—a charming and practical installation. In the Octachrome design.

Here, quality is the best possible investment! All Kohler installations cost no more to put in, add to property value and save money in the end. If a million home builders were to broadcast advice about plumbing, their one major point would be—Avoid second-rate fixtures and fittings. It pays to have the best! Kohler quality is an economical luxury—one that brings yearly dividends of satisfaction, as long as you live.

A visit to the nearest Kohler showroom will give you a wealth of new ideas on fixtures and fittings. Any one who plans to build or remodel should discuss this important subject with his architect and plumbing contractor. Meanwhile, write for free Booklet G-7, which illustrates attractive groupings and suggests modern ideas about home plumbing. . . . Kohler Co. Founded 1873. Kohler, Wisconsin. . . . ELEVEN IMPORTANT POINTS ABOUT PLUMBING

- 1 Kohler designs are decorative, purposeful, correct.
- 2 Kohler enamel is made by an exclusive formula, fused with an everlasting bond and keeps its smooth, glistening surface.
- 3 Vitreous china pieces are sculptured for beauty and service . . . thoroughly vitrified at high temperatures and armored with a smooth, lustrous, lasting glaze.
- 4 Kohler colors are soft, livable pastels . . . the white is a perfect white . . . the black a clear, brilliant black.
- 5 Kohler metal fittings are engineered for efficiency . . . heavily plated with chromium, nickel or gold. They match the fixtures in style, character and quality.
- 6 Materials are the finest—manufacture is most particular. All Kohler products show craftsmanship and care.
- 7 This company pioneered many of the big advances in plumbing. This year's Kohler products are next year's new ideas.
- 8 Kohler quality extends to the kitchen and laundry—for every plumbing need.
- 9 Kohler quality costs no more . . . and saves money later.
- 10 Kohler fixtures and fittings are handled and installed by qualified plumbers.
- 11 Back of the Kohler trade-mark are the traditions and spirit of an entire community . . . beautiful Kohler Village.

Not All Firecrackers!

By Theodore Roosevelt
Governor-General of Porto Rico

THE Fourth of July! Even now the mention of that date brings back to me memories of seething excitement. To all of us children, next to Christmas, the Fourth was the most adventurous moment of the year. We little boys had a barbarous way of celebrating it. For us the day began at 12:01 a. m. At that time we crawled out of our respective beds, pulled on our clothes and without a backward glance at toothbrush or soap, stole softly down the stairs. After loading ourselves with packages of firecrackers, we hopped off to meet our cousins at some appointed rendezvous, each contingent heralding its approach with some agreed signal—whistle or owl hoot.

Then together we could steal through the pitch-black wood paths, feeling much like explorers in a far land. In turn we would visit the houses of the neighbors, signaling our advent by a fusillade of firecrackers. The hazards were delightful. At any moment some dog might spring snarling at us from the shadow of a bush, and bare legs seemed very unprotected. The climax was generally capped when some poor householder, thoroughly infuriated, would burst out of the door in his pajamas. Then we would scuttle into the surrounding darkness like rabbits diving into a briar patch. Once my cousins' father, in the interest of amicable relations with his neighbors, forbade his sons to go; but they went just the same. That morning we were walking home through a wood path flecked with clear summer sunlight when the sound of some one whistling caught our attention. Looking up, we saw their father coming toward us, strolling along slapping his leg with a riding switch. Something told us that one of those intimate family dramas was about to be enacted. One little boy said, "Gee!" and with one accord the rest of the contingent turned tail, leaving our poor cousins confronted by their approaching doom. We felt that if we stayed we might by some error be included in what was coming.

A thousand other memories come thronging back, ranging from the time one of my brothers inadvertently sat on a giant firecracker that was about to explode, to the time when we set Smith's field on fire and had to form an amateur fire brigade.

Father and mother, however, did not believe that the Fourth should mean to us merely firecrackers and fun. They felt

Another Self-Owned Georgia Tree

(Mr. Parker, local representative of the Davey Tree Expert Company, was assisted in the gathering of the data for the following article by Mrs. R. W. Yarbrough and Mrs. Emma Y. Evans, a daughter of Rev. John W. Yarbrough.)

OXFORD, GA., the birthplace of Emory college, founded in 1831 and now the home of Emory Junior college, is also the home of one of Georgia's most beautiful trees—in fact the most beautiful white oak (Quercus Alba) I have ever seen.

Mrs. Emma Y. Evans, a daughter of Rev. John W. Yarbrough, tells me that her father took a great deal of interest in his trees and in 1854 he and her brother George pruned this tree in the way he thought it should be done. His fellow-townsmen made loud their assertion that the tree had been ruined, but the good oak thrived, and now is a specimen of its kind. There seems to be some difference of opinion as to its age, but it is well over one hundred years since this giant oak started its growth from a little acorn. At the base the trunk is approximately six feet in diameter, and its height is about eighty feet. The diameter of the spread of its branches is over one hundred feet covering a circle, the circumference of which is about three hundred and fifty feet.

The Yarbrough oak or the "Prince of the Forest" as it is often called, has a warm place in the hearts of the students of old Emory college. One student, the boy George who did his father's bidding in trimming the prince, grew to manhood and became one of God's messengers to mankind. The Reverend George W. Yarbrough has passed to his reward, but his old-time friend, staunch and true, bears evidence of his thoughtfulness in the days gone by. When Reverend Mr. Yarbrough made yearly pilgrimages to his old home in Oxford, he would go and stand under the spreading branches of this oak and live over again the old days with their happy memories. He would always place a wreath of flowers on its trunk, and nearby some written declaration of his love for it, often in verse. No one dared molest these evidences of his love for his friend. Every Christmas he would send a card to some relative or friend to pin to "my beloved friend, the Big Tree."

Another of the old Emory boys, the late Dr. Bob Hyer, a noted educator of Texas, when on a visit to his alma mater, said that he wished to take home with him two things—the museum of Emory college, and the big tree.

DEEDED TO ITSELF.

The commissioners of the town recently deeded the tree to itself, making it the second one in our state with this distinction, the other being at Athens. The deed reads as follows, being drawn up by Colonel E. W. Strozler, a member of the faculty of Emory Junior college and city attorney: State of Georgia—Newton County:—

This indenture, made this 30th day of September, 1929, between the commissioners of the township of Oxford, county of Newton, state of Georgia of the first part, and that giant oak tree known as the "Prince of the Forest," of the county of Newton, state of Georgia, township of Oxford, of the second part.

Witnesseth: that the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of love and affection, have granted unto the party of the second part, all that tract or parcel of land situated, lying and being in the township of Oxford, a few paces directly southwest of the present postoffice of the said township, including that majestic tree, known as the "Prince of the Forest," and ten feet of land running as a radius from the trunk of said tree, on all sides of said tree, this land and tree abutting the property, including the dwelling house owned by one Jim Rawlins, the esteemed barber. Be it known by all men, that this is a deed by said commissioners, of said tree to itself, the conveyance growing out of holy love and sincere affection entertained by our citizens and countless others for this great work of nature and of nature's God.

Signed and sealed in the presence of The commissioners of the town of Oxford,

W. R. BRANHAM, Chairman,
R. L. PAINE,
R. L. GILES,
R. F. HARWELL,
D. T. STONE,
V. S. WILLIAMS,
W. F. SHERWOOD.

E. Walton Strozler,
Attorney-at-law

APPROPRIATION CONSIDERED.

The commissioners are also considering an appropriation for the care of the Yarbrough oak. While it is in excellent vitality now, as shown by its wonderful foliage, there are some dead branches that should be removed, and decay which should be treated has made its appearance in some places.

It has been a cherished dream of the Woman's Club of Oxford to purchase a dwelling, partly under the branches of this oak: from Barber Rawlins, move it back, converting it into a clubhouse, and making a beautiful park around it, thus making an attractive spot, and lessening the danger of fire to the tree. Those of us who love this tree, believe it should be cared for and protected at all costs, and we trust that at some time and in some way this dream may be realized.

The following immortal lines of Joyce Kilmer aptly apply to this wonderful tree:

I think that I shall never see,
A poem as lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is pressed Against the earth's sweet flowing breast

A tree that looks at God all day,
And lifts its leafy arms to pray.

A tree that may in summer wear
A nest of robins in her hair.

Upon whose bosom snow has lain,
Who intimately lives with rain.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

Not All Firecrackers

most strongly that in addition we should be made to realize the greater significance of the celebration. To my way of thinking, we in this country are too prone to believe our obligations are discharged by lip service. We feel that the observance of this national holiday means merely parades with local brass bands and orations. Of course, these count for nothing unless they symbolize a deeper consciousness on our part.

Personally, I have reached the point where I instinctively distrust the gentleman who gets up and announces in thunderous tones that he is a 100 per cent red-blooded American. As a rule, such a man is satisfied merely with the statement and does not consider it necessary to turn it into action. Words are splendid if they are used to stir consciousness or prompt a line of conduct, but in themselves alone they are of no value. That is where we make our mistake. We mix the means with the end. We feel that the celebration is all that's necessary, much the way some of the savage tribes I have known considered that an offering to their gods atoned for any type of conduct.

We join the crowd, sit in the audience and applaud the speaker, but hardly one in ten of us realizes that this applause is most meaningless unless it predicates action. One ounce of action outweighs in value all the applause from one end of the country to the other. A national celebration, if properly understood, should carry with it much of the significance of a service in church. In it we recall the high deeds of the past and pledge ourselves solemnly to conduct ourselves so in the coming year that we may be worthy of the ideals that prompted them and the sacrifices they entailed. A good motto for us would be, "Act as you cheer!"

As I see it, on the Fourth of July we celebrate the ideals of our great republic—ideals of freedom, justice and equality of opportunity to which the founders dedicated our nation. Those are the thoughts which should run through our minds during the day. Concretely, today we have an illustration of needed action on our part, in so far as the island of Porto Rico goes. That island has 1,500,000 people who are American citizens and loyal American citizens. It is but 100 miles long by 35 miles in width. Those fellow American citizens of ours are now struggling under a heavy burden. They are scourged by disease, poverty is their constant companion and economic conditions are desperate. The insular revenues, though we are devoting 40 per cent of them to education, are sufficient to provide only approximately 38 per cent of the children of school age with opportunity for schooling.

Our Porto Rican fellow citizens are fine people. They are fully capable of taking advantage of any opportunity they have. Our mission must be to endeavor to adjust things in such a fashion that they have the chances in life to which we like to feel every American citizen is entitled. They can and will make good, but just at present, due to circumstances, they cannot create the chance for themselves. They need help. Congress has extended them aid, but congress should extend them more. In addition, we are organizing an appeal to private individuals to furnish us with the money to feed the starving children and to fight tuberculosis, hookworm and malaria, from one or more of which diseases three-quarters of the people are suffering.

We are striving for a constructive program which will place Porto Rico in the future in a position where she can take care of herself from her own resources. If we in this country really mean the words we repeat and applause we give to the orators' well turned phrases on the Fourth of July, we can show our faith by endeavoring to see that these million and a half of American citizens get the chances in life that the founders of the nation believed every citizen should have.

BY ROBERT QUILLEN

"I COULD o' cried with rage an' pity when they told me Jane was goin' to marry that good-for-nothin' Jones boy.

"It's one o' the great mysteries o' nature why a woman that's got sense don't use none of it when somebody asks her to be his'n.

"If women could do the pickin', mighty few of 'em would marry the triflin' bums they do.

"But a girl is raised to think it's a kind o' disgrace not to get married; an' when she reaches her twenties without bein' led to the altar, she gives up her dreams o' bein' wooed by a rich an' perfect man an' gets so scared an' desperate she's willin' to listen to anything that wears pants.

"The result is they marry some feller that ain't got half as much education or good taste or brains as they've got, an' live in discontented poverty the rest o' their days.

"The love they feel is half friendship an' half pity for a poor boob that's doin' his best, but they can't respect a man that ain't got as much sense as they have, an' no woman can be happy tied to a man she's compelled to look down on.

"I wish girls would get over the fool notion that stayin' single is shameful.

"A girl that can make her own livin' is a plum' fool to quit an' be a servant to some two-by-four nothin' just to keep from bein' called a old maid.

"Let her use her brains to make herself independent an' then she can pick out a mate that's above her, same as the men do."

The Road of His Feet

—By—Achmed Abdulah

Allah! What Did the Tribesman Care? They Were of the Moslems.
And the Others? Infidels
All—A Curse on Them and Their Fathers, All the Fathers of Pigs.

HERE were still here faint memories of the scarred, bitter years before the czar's cossacks conquered and pacified the central Asia steppes, when the northern Afghan villages, that huddled their houses and barns, their fields and cattle pens and sheep folds in the Valley of the Wealth of Waters, were ever watching and listening, at dawn or nightfall, for the threat of glittering scabbards and the grim, nasal beat of Tartar war drums.

But those days had passed—"May they never return!" prayed the graybeards—and today there was peace and a pleasant rumor of spring; with sappy green shoots thrusting through the wry bushes that fringed the slopes, and the water sobbing in the brooks with the lilt it has in a man's dreams when he is far from home, and the rich, moist smell where the wooden plow cut and turned the clods, and gold dusting the windows—and peace and spring, too, in the heart of Dost Murad as he walked by Turkan Katoom's side and told her in his earthly Afghan speech that he loved her.

"Your mother—may she have her.

"Your mother—may she have her share in paradise!—must have been the pretty woman of the hills and the plains."

"Because the saying goes that she resembled you as one barley grain resembles another. O treasure of all the women in the world!"

She stopped. She looked up at him.

"And what then?" she demanded; and, when he did not reply, only blushed a little: "Ah—the shame of me!—that I must offer you my lips!"

So she kissed him.

She was neither white nor rosy nor brown, but a clear, even gold the strong mountain sun and wind had dyed her, and her hair the fox red of autumn leaves and her eyes the silvered gray of a well tempered blade. In peasants' stout duffel and peasant's gay, fluttering holiday ribbons, staunch of body and with the promise some day of hale motherhood . . . not bad looking, you would have said, and passed on, nor turned for a second glimpse.

But Dost Murad saw more in her than the bare telling of the words. And she saw more in him than what he was: a tall, broad shouldered, ruddy skinned Afghan lad; handsome enough to go on with, as his mother said of him; with a wide, generous mouth more ready to spread than to tighten and, above the chasm of deep, brown eyes, like an unbroken ebony line where the brows joined as is the way with those of a headlong, stubborn tendency to leap the fences of their own careless building.

"Allah!" he whispered. "If we could always be young—and shun the world—and be as we are today—unchanging like the rocks . . ."

"Hail!" she exclaimed. "But I want to change O, my hero!"

"Oh . . .?"

"Shall I not be the mother of your sons—some day?"

"Soon?"

"Soon!"

Their eyes met; held each other.

"I have the marriage portion nearly saved," he said after a while. "If my crops are good—and if the red cow has a calf . . ."

"The price for my heart and hand?" she laughed.

"More than that!" He joined in her laughter. "There are also 50 rupees my mother promised me, and three goats, and a string of Persian gold coins. Your father is the greedy man . . . ho! Not greedy enough—for you, with the shining of your eyes like the living of far stars!" He grew serious. "My mother talked to your father . . ."

"Last night. I listened at the curtain. Father is willing."

"There will be soon—may Allah grant it—the ta-zallit n-tsitt, the prayer of the bride!"

"Prayer for you, Dost Murad!"

"For both of us, beloved!"

Yar Khan spoke rapidly, "I will come last! No fear, little queen! I shall trill a sweet misra at your wedding!" And Turkan Katoom obediently swung herself over the precipice.

Again she kissed him. He buried his face in the curling hair about her neck.

Thoughts fell away from them. They stood still—so still that a thrush dropped from a branch, hopped nearer, and shrilled a thin, piping tune.

He heard it; turned; smiled.

"Be off!" he said to the bird. "Do you not see that you are interrupting two lovers? And you nothing but a wee beast—of no importance at all!"

The thrush flew away; and they went into the dip of the Valley of the Wealth of Waters.

The afternoon was sinking into the calm it ever has in these hills, drowsing, mellowing. Already the shy dappled deer were nosing through the birch clearings. Already a timber wolf loped out grayly for his evening kill. Already two blue winger mountain wrens—the messengers of night—were beginning to lace the bushes with a filigree of reedy sounds. And so—with day's work done, the seeding well strewn, the long horned, shaggy cattle lowing in the pens, the full uddered goats leaping home from the upper pastures—there was music and rejoicing and laughter in the hujra, the communal hall of the tribe that faced the simple village mosque with the pride of stout walls and a great thatched roof.

It was an old Afghan peasant custom, this meeting, on a spring evening, in the hujra. They would gather here, men and women—women of the north, free, unveiled, high colored, strong bodomed—and smoke and drink tea and munch dried sunflower seeds and swap the news of the day.

Local gossip.

A goat gone astray . . . "or perhaps stolen? Who can tell, neighbor? Our young men—Ullah karim!—are getting lawless. It is not as it was in the good old days!"

Musa Khan's grandmother—"hail! hail! hail!—peaked guttural laughter—had chased her lusty, six-foot grandson all the way up to the Rock of the Tooth of Time, brandishing a thorn stick, because she had caught him smoking her pipe.

Hunji, the unclean Hindu gypsy—"May Allah send an earthquake to destroy all gypsies! Pahl! Eaters of offal! Abusers of the salt!"—had snared and killed the chief's pet hunting falcon and stewed it in a pot with a handful of wild garlic and devoured the unsavory mess.

Or better:

"Have you heard, Shikandar Khan?"

"What?"

"This morning Siberian geese flew over the Tukkrum hills. The weary creatures—so far from home . . ."

"A bad, bad omen!"

"Aye! Perhaps there will be again the beating of Tartar war drums and the swish of the red sword!"

"No, no! A good omen!"

"Let us ask the priest!"

Then that white bearded, green-turbaned worthy's devout if meaningless explanation:

"There is no refuge nor strength save in Allah, the lord of daybreak!"

There would be, too, chiefly if a stranger, traveling Bokharan trader or Persian caravanman, had passed through the valley, rumors of the far places; of tribal feud on the turbulent frontier; of a salty scandal amongst the Amir's grantees at the court of Kabul; of political intrigues in Moscow and Peking and Calcutta; of a British army column wiped out by the savage Waziris of the Indian border, and envious comment: "hayah! the grand, brave looting! And all to gorge the gullets of these lousy southerners!"—until finally, when the news had been told and retold and spiced with the good natured, coarse jesting of the hills, some old man would clap his hands to enjoin silence.

"Music!" he would demand.

And then a great roaring of ancient ballads and a trilling of misras, songs improvised on the spur of the moment in which the singer glorifies his own or his tribe's prowess, or croons a melody of love.

Thus the hujra, tonight as always; and Dost Murad and Turkan Katoom entered hand in hand, and exchanged greetings with their friends who had gathered there.

Men and women. Old and young. Some squatted on their heels, pulling noisily at the jade or amber stems of gurgling water pipes. Others were stretched out on camel's hair rugs or on soft beds of springy, scented spruce boughs, their back to the huge fir logs that crackled in the fireplace since here, in the north, even May has a touch of frost.

At the far end of the room, facing them as an actor faces an audience, stood a man, six and a half foot of brawn and muscle and bone from his head to his ankles; seeming all the taller for an owl's gray wing that jutted at a slant above his immense, shaggy fur cap, almost scraping the rafters; seeming all the broader for a snow leopard's pelt rolled around his thick chest.

There was about him little of the earthbound peasant. Straight was his back; not crooked with the pull of the plow and the pain of the long, clogged furrows. High in the instep were his feet, bounding and stag sure; not flat and slouching with the dragging through the sticky, sodden soil.

His face was raised at a keen angle on the square, flagging chin; and above it the beaked nose with the flaring, nervous nostrils, throwing a purple shadow across the high cheekbones; the mustache brushed up aggressively until its points threatened the black, opaque, almond shaped eyes—a Mongol's eyes, not an Afghan's—and a flash of even, white teeth, as, with pursed lips and the sweetest voice in all the world's hills, he sang an old Afghan dailau:

Last night I went for a stroll
In the bazaar of black lock;
Like a bee I sipped honey
In the jungle of black locks.

Last night I strolled leisurely Through the garden of black locks;
Like a bee I tasted the sugar
On my love's pomegranate lips.
I inhaled the scent of the garland
About my little queen's neck—
The garland of black locks. . . .

His voice rose triumphantly. His great hands beat staccato time:

Last night I went for a stroll
In the bazaar of black locks;
Like a bee I sipped honey
In the jungle of black locks. . . .

He finished his song. There was deafening applause. Demands for more—"More, more, O son of the world!" And again and again he stood upon his feet, singing ballad and misra, until his voice echoed far out into the valley and the hills, stilling the murmuring of the wood doves, causing the dappled deer to look up from their nibbling, awakening the willows that dreamed of summer as they swayed in the lullaby wind of night.

Yet—and here was this man's tragedy—you would hear in the applause only the men's rough, deep shouts and never a woman clapping her hands or stamping her feet or crying a high pitched:

"Well done, O Yar Khan!"

Since, of all the young men in these villages, there was only Yar Khan upon whom sloe black eye did not look with hope, nor steel gray eye with flame of desire.

"A dog aye back to the dung heap!" said the women. "A Tartar, aye, back to the wild road!"

For Yar Khan's father had been a Tartar raider who had flashed through the Valley of the Wealth of Waters with a tail of 30 men—and, by the same token, of 30 crooked swords—demanding, and obtaining, tribute.

"Give me a halter and I'll soon pick up camel or horse to fit it!" had been his lawless boast.

At the time there had been gossip that Yar Khan's father had been no ordinary freebooter, but had once been a prince—with peacock feather and yellow dragon embroidered jacket—in far Peking at the court of the old Buddha, the Dowager empress. Indeed, even in robbing the peasants he had still been the finely spoken and mannered gentleman and, while his followers had guarded the door with naked steel, had often shown a handsome leg in stepping the measure of a hill dance or rolled out bits of classic Persian quotations—kith not too much of a sing-song Mongol accent—that had even impressed the priest.

Then, one day, he had carried off the daughter of a petty village chief. Two years later she had returned, barefooted, in rags, broken in spirit and body, a tiny boy riding astride her hips.

The child's father?

Killed by Kirgiz shepherds, far on the brittle steppes of Outer Mongolia, during a raid on their flocks—and his head spiked on a tall, black lance, twisted in the obscene grimace of death, its long, green jade earrings ludicrously jerking and tinkling in the cold wind of the plains!

Thus her homecoming; she had not survived it by more than a week; and it was Yar Khan's grandfather who had brought him up—as an Afghan, not as a Tartar.

But his father's blood screamed in his veins, and he was never the lad to till the ground nor herd the goats, but a wild, free creature of the woods and the hills. It was ever for him, his horse and his shaggy hound, and a snatched meal, and off and out of the Valley of the Wealth of Waters to see what lay beyond the ridges—to watch the badger folk burrowing into their hamlets—to give close ear to the wild goose crying—to thrill and laugh at the brook trout jumping madly for the fly—to climb the high peaks and listen to the brown eagles barking at the evening mists—to fill his nostrils with the acrid scent of wood smoke at twilight and the sweet scent of coarse, tufted grass with morning dew. And it was said of him that at a whistle he could coax flopping birds to drop to his shoulder, and at a whinny shy deer to come to his heel and nuzzle his hand.

"Allah!" he replied one day to his grandfather's mild reproaches. "My father was a Tartar. Tell me—was ever lamb born in the gray wolf's litter?"

"May the Lord not let you see the evil! You—oh—do you think of raiding, of the nomads' speary warring?"

"No. I am not eager for the clash of weapons. But the hunting winds are loose—and there's a grand, jaunty tune in the scratching of claws in the deep forest and the swaying of the trees in the higher hills my ears want to listen to!"

The older man had sighed; then smiled. He liked Yar Khan. So did the other tribesmen.

There was nobody like him to stalk or fish or trap; nobody like him to chant an ancient ballad. And so, as he wandered through the villages, it was always the hearty handshake, the offer of a glass of tea or a water pipe filled with finely shredded Persian tobacco, and:

"Sing us a stave, O son of the world!"

Perhaps, in their inmost souls, they envied Yar Khan a little, and felt like putting by their plows, and letting their herds shift for themselves and following him to the hills and woods. For, many centuries earlier, then ancestors had been men on horseback who had come to this land as conquerors. They were now no longer warriors; were peaceful husbandmen. But, deep in their racial consciousness, there was still the lure of the old days, the calling back to the free days; and when occasionally—he did it but seldom—Yar Khan asked one of them to join him during the pause of time before morning, when night and day came to grips and the great stags bayed in the laurel wood, the other would be flattered and glad to go.

It was different with the women. They, too, had vague racial memories. Memories of centuries ago. Memories of their men riding with jingling steel and throaty, savage war cries behind a chief astride a stallion whose mane was dyed scarlet in sign of strife. Memories of how the men had come back; many wounded, maimed, broken—and some who had never come back except stretched stark on their but-falo hide shields, their eyes glazed, their breath stilled. Memories of gray grief and red death.

There had been fighting a-plenty—to the older women's remembrance—the last time the freebooting Tartars had ridden over the land. They saw no romance in death, however glorious. Death was death. It was the end—but for the tears and sorrowing.

Not that their life was easy. Lean comforts here, in this chilly, northern valley. But comforts enough to their tight imagining. Better the scent present than the bloody past.

They did not care to rise above the tough facts of the soil. Peasant women of meager living and prosy soul, their eyes were always fixed upon the cold, sane congruities of the earth. They did not want their fathers and husbands and sons to stray, not even in their thoughts; did not like this Yar Khan, who harked back to the free life, the wild, lawless life.

Only a few days earlier Turkan Katoom had met him on the road in the White village. She had not read the light of tenderness and desire eddying up in his almond shaped eyes; had stared at him with stony contempt when—he did not know why—he had told her his creed:

"Why do I not stay in the valley and till and herd? Hayah! If man says to himself: 'This is a good place! Here shall I bide!' is at the end of his life, and end of his road. But the road which I take leads beyond all roads, beyond the last of all God's days! And, when she had not replied: 'Don't you understand? Tell me—have you ever heard the song of the wilderness—the little merry song of the hidden world that thrives in the trees' green shade and rooms at night in the star shine?'"

"There is also the song of the plow! The song of the harrow! The song of the lowing cattle!"

"Cattle are brew to the yoke! And the plow squeaks! And the harrow grates on my ear!"

She had looked at him with a sudden, queer swelling of hate; had exclaimed:

"Tartar! Tartar!"

And tonight, when Yar Khan had finished his singing and when she heard Dost Murad's applause peaking clear and high above that of the other men, she spoke to him in a whisper, repeating the mumble of the women:

"A dog, aye, back to the dung heap! A Tartar, aye, back to the wild road!"

Dost Murad laughed. "There are moments," he said, "when I envy him the stepping of this way! Allah! Allah! But I warrant it is a careless, gay way!"

It was then that fear came to the heart of Turkan Katoom; yet greater fear when Yar Khan stepped up to Dost Murad and slapped his shoulders and said: "Yours is a voice as smooth as honey. Yesterday I heard you in the pastures, warbling in the INSTALLMENT II.

PROVIDENCE which directs winds shall blow and sparrows fall has a knack of defending the defenseless. A breeze stirring from seaward bore the blazing wreckage away from the habitations of man to fall a charred and twisted skeleton in a playing field north of London.

The searchlights winked and went out. The guns grumbled and were silent and bugles sounded the "All Clear."

How long Joan and Harley stood watching that awful pageant in the sky, they neither knew, nor cared. The red glow had died down and the tranquil stars had reappeared before consciousness of themselves returned.

Joan gave an outward breath and shivered.

"Poor brutes," she said, "but they asked for it—they did ask for it. Don't you feel awfully hungry? I do. Let's go down—shall we?"

"Let's," he echoed.

As they walked across the flat roof her foot slipped on a shrapnel bullet. Quite a number of bits and pieces had rained down upon the leads. The discovery made Harley angry and responsible. What a thoughtless fool he had been to expose the girl to such a hazard. Any one of those bits might—He turned and looked at her.

"What's the matter with you?" she asked.

He was about to reply when two hands and a face appeared in the black mouth of the trap door.

"I say you two," said the voice of Freddie Miller, "mother is now vacating the bathroom, and it might be tactful to come down."

"We're on the way," Harley replied.

"Good," said Freddie. "Honi soit qui Palais de Danse and all that but, in spite of an affection for dog fights, mother is a stout Victorian and might think it peculiar for Joan to entertain gunner officers on the roof."

Joan's descent through the trap door showed complete disdain for the interests of the frock she wore. It is true there was nothing in the world could injure her appearance. It was of the kind that transcended external adornments. In sack cloth she would have lost none of her loveliness. With her frock ripped, her hands black and a smudge of soot upon the tip of her insolent nose she looked even more distractingly lovely than the most ardent attention to details of the toilet could have rendered her.

To ensure themselves that Lady Miller had actually vacated the bathroom they entered it together and all had a wash in the same basin, crossing the water and spitting in it for luck and getting easy with each other in consequence. Then they all dried their hands on one towel and brushed their hair with one brush, and since there is no thirstier work than watching an air raid they all had a drink out of the tooth glass. Indeed their conduct in the bathroom was distinguished by a spirit of good fellowship unmarred by conventional or hygienic considerations.

Cleansed, refreshed and fortified they descended to the drawing room where Lady Miller after the excitements of the raid had resorted to the soporific influences of knitting a Balaclava helmet in rainbow wool.

"That's one less," she said, as they entered the room, referring no doubt to the raider. Seeing Harley she added, "and one more that I don't know."

"I forget his name," said Joan, "but he's a friend of Freddie's and very much above the average."

Harley blushed, bowed and was introduced.

"Trevelyan," Lady Miller repeated. "O, yes, it comes back to me. Your grandfather was one of the great Victorian novelists. I know your aunt, a disagreeable old lady who lives in Grosvenor square and cheats in quite a nice way at bridge. And you," she wrinkled her smooth forehead meditatively, "you were at Magdalen with Freddie and did something very odd to a railway train, and wrote short stories."

"Now you've got your dossier," said Joan, "let's go and get some eats. Mother, may we use the kitchen?"

"No," said Lady Miller, "you may not, but as you certainly will, please Captain Trevelyan, see that they respect my butter. At this stage of war and time of night dripping is good enough for any one."

Together they descended to the basement where Rogers, the butler, a man of grave and formidable appearance, aided by a large scale map of France, was delivering a lecture upon the war to two female servants, a page boy, and the housekeeper, Mrs. Blake. It had become an understood thing during air raids for Rogers to lecture upon the war. It served, as he pointed out, "to distract the minds of female from present dangers, but at the same time to keep them patriotically occupied."

From an historical and tactical point of view the lectures were not illuminating, being devoted exclusively to the names of places associated with names of officers, familiar to the household, who had sustained death or injury in that area.

"Mons," he said, "Mons will never be forgotten because it was there that Lord Frederic, our master, Sir Balliol's cousin, had a glorious fall."

"Of an 'orse?" the page boy demanded.

"Not off a horse, but into everlasting glory," was the ponderous reply.

"Rogers is lecturing," Joan whispered. "Don't make a noise and we might hear a bit."

"I call upon you, Louisa," said Rogers, directing an index finger at the second housemaid, "to repeat what I told you about Weeps, or, as our soldiers call it, Wipers."

"I couldn't, Mr. Rogers," said the girl. "I couldn't, really. What with them booms and bangings every word of it 'as slipped clean out of m' head."

"In that case," said Rogers, "I have no choice but to repeat the information." He was drawing breath to do so when his eye fell upon Joan standing beyond the open doorway. "Miss Joan," said he, and, rising, brought the company to attention.

"The all clear's gone, so if you'd like to sheer off to bed you can," said she.

Rogers waved a hand toward the door and the staff retired thankfully.

"You don't mind if Rogers stops?" said Joan, cocking an eyebrow at Harley. "Because he's a friend of mine. He used to bathe me beautifully when I was little."

It was with a positive twinge of jealousy that Harley greeted the old butler.

"My name's Trevelyan," he said.

Rogers shot a glance at the artillery badge in the lapel of Harley's tunic.

"Field, sir?" he inquired.

"Heavy," Marley replied. "Six-inch Hows, .007 Seige Battery."

"If one might ask the sector, sir?"

"Hebuterne."

A warm light shone in the old man's eyes.

"My own son had the honor of being wounded at Hebuterne, sir, if you'll pardon the observation. And a very hot shop he said it was, too, sir."

Harley nodded.

"Pretty hot now and then. Hope he's getting on all right."

"Very nicely, sir. Lost an eye, sir, but otherwise nothing to complain of."

"I'm going to forage for sardines," said Joan, taking Freddie in tow.

Harley was about to follow when Rogers caught his eye meaningly.

"Excuse me, sir," he said, "but I was looking at Miss Joan's dress. Was it the roof?"

"I'm afraid it was. We were up there together. It isn't very healthy, is it?"

Rogers sighed heavily.

"It is not, sir; in fact, it's very worrying. I had hidden the ladder, too."

"Of course, it's no affair of mine," said Harley; "in fact, it's infernal cheek of me to suggest it."

"Suggest what, sir?"

"Flowers you've got, eh?"

"A padlock, Rogers, or perhaps a few screws."

The old servant beamed upon him lovingly.

"Thank you very much indeed, sir."

"You see, I'm going back tomorrow," said Harley, feeling an explanation was called for—and possibly an apology.

"It shall be done, sir."

"Stout fellar," said Harley, and found he was shaking hands. "She," he nodded in the direction Joan had taken, "she doesn't seem to know what fear means."

"She does not, sir."

"And that makes a man nervous."

Rogers looked at him in thoughtful silence.

"Have you known Miss Joan long, sir, if I may ask?"

"Long? No, you wouldn't say long." He consulted his watch. "Best part of an hour, I suppose."

"Just so, sir, but it makes no difference."

Harley laughed sheepishly. The evening had been full of embarrassing nuances. To avoid the old man's eyes his glance traveled round the kitchen and came to rest on a snapshot of Joan perched against a tea cup.

"That," he said, with sudden courage, and nodded towards it. "That snapshot. It's no good to you with the original about."

Rogers beamed paternally. One good action deserves another, and he might not have thought of screwing down the trap door.

"I shan't be looking if you care to slip it in your pocket," he said. Which Harley did.

With a loaf of bread, a tin of sardines, a basin half full of dripping, and cups of steaming cocoa, they sat themselves down at the kitchen table for a midnight feast.

Rogers, armed with a small leather bag that jingled suggestively, had excused himself and departed on an errand of mercy and precaution which demanded solitude, a pair of steps, and a screw driver.

Unified by ties of common danger and common fellowship, they attacked the fare before them with appetite and enthusiasm.

"For the proper enjoyment of food," said Joan, a knife in one hand, the loaf in the other, "there's nowhere like a kitchen."

"I agree," said Harley, aware that mere agreement did less than justice to the state of his feelings.

"If I were not a lady," she went on, oratorically, "I should have been a cook. Nowadays, of course, it isn't possible to be both. How do you like your dripping, Harley? You don't mind my calling you Harley, do you?"

"It would break my heart if you didn't," he replied, and, conscious of having been overbold, took a great gulp of boiling cocoa and nearly passed out.

"If it's too hot, put it in your saucer and blow on it," she advised. "There, I've given you the black crust. Here, Freddie, you can eat your own."

Freddie accepted this sisterly action without protest, but when he had reached across for the dripping pan his face fell.

"Well, really," he complained, "if you haven't given the beggar all the meaty juice from the bottom."

"Certainly I have," she retorted. "When you start your new duties in the A. S. C. you'll get plenty of tidbits, but until you do you shan't."

"That's right," said Freddie, "run down the man behind the guns. Ridicule the greater front behind the front. The fact that I've fought and bled for my England doesn't count, I suppose."

"Freddie, darling, that isn't fair," Joan sniggered. "I'd love to have been with you when you were wounded. I believe it was the only time you ever stopped talking."

"It isn't as if I do talk," Freddie protested. "She never gives anyone a chance. Appoints herself O. C. conversation in any company."

He stopped abruptly and seized the sardines.

"No, you don't, my child. That tin contains 11 Peneaus, and my share is four and his share is four and yours is three."

Joan shook her head sadly.

"I am sorry about Freddie," she apologized, "but I'm afraid he'll never make a host."

"As her idea of a host is someone who voluntarily starves himself to death I never hope to," he replied. "What's more I'm going to help myself first. So here goes."

"From a pig one expects a grunt," said Joan, "and one is not disappointed."

It was all very idiotic and facetious and typical of an age which, confronted by a greater emergency than the world had ever before experienced, never allowed itself the luxury of acting normally.

In their exchanges Joan and her brother maintained a running fire of ridicule and abuse that completely failed to disguise the true state of their affections for each other. Half jealous, wholly envious and with a shameless disregard for wartime conventions Harley tore down the camouflage with a single question.

"Do many brothers and sisters love each other as you do?"

Freddie's surprise was marked by a flush of angry red. Joan faced the situation with better courage.

"He's not a bad old stick, and he's leaving us tomorrow. Sorry to have given it away though."

And putting a hand against her brother's cheek she cuddled his head against her side.

"Easy on," he said, but made no real effort to escape. "What about finishing up and going to some dance place?"

The suggestion was unheeded, doubtless because there was no chance of improving on existing conditions. Harley, too, had somehow driven away that spirit of flippancy that calls for the accompaniment of a jazz band.

"You haven't a sister then?" she asked.

"No. You behold a poor orphan. That's what makes me grateful for cutting in with you folks tonight. It seems natural to spend the last night of one's leave this way."

"You go back tomorrow, too?"

"Yes, the seven forty."

"Lots of people coming to see you off?"

"None I imagine."

"No girls?"

Harley shook his head and laughed.

"Not one."

"O, dear," said Joan, "that must be remedied, mustn't it?"

"Do you mean," he began, and hesitated.

Something perilously like an understanding was growing between them. Something perilously sentimental. They felt it simultaneously. It was expressed in the mutual consciousness of a third party being present. Harley, even so, was powerless to resist it. For the first time in his life he was trembling on the brink of saying something tender and maudlin. Joan, as a woman, was better equipped to meet the emergency.

"I shall have to be there in any case," she said. "We are sending my poor brother to France for a change. He doesn't get enough to eat over here, so we are arranging for him to be fattened up at the expense of the rest of the army."

The spell was broken—also a cocoa cup in the rough and tumble that followed.

It was a very dishevelled couple who subsequently delivered up their guest to the cool and starry embraces of the night. Together they watched him go and, long after he had passed out of sight, listened to the echo of his footfalls dying away in Lansdowne Passage.

"Shall I go after him and tell him I like him?" Joan asked.

"You've done nothing else all evening, was the insulting reply."

Joan was quite brazen.

"Good," said she.

Joan, "I believe you're in love with the beggar."

"I believe I could be," she nodded.

"Why not then? He's got bags of money."

"Cad," said Joan. "Pig," said Joan. "You would try and spoil everything, wouldn't you?"

"Damn it," he complained, "what's the harm in telling you that?"

"The harm," she retorted, "is that I'm in the kind of mood that makes me want to cook for a man—that's what."

And throwing her arms round her brother's neck she kissed him with a vehement intensity which convinced him that she was thinking of someone else.

Where Lansdowne Passage opens its mouth into a yawn that becomes Curzon street, Harley Trevelyan stopped in a pool of light shed by a masked lamp-post.

His whole being was conscious of amazement and exaltation. Never before had he experienced a sensation to equal it. It was as if a thousand ports had been thrown open to admit light and air to the darkest recesses of his body and soul. He was in love, utterly, overwhelmingly.

Save for a possible glimpse of her at Victoria station it was unlikely they would ever meet again. That did not matter. His rapture was not to be marred or tarnished by gloomy forebodings.

The love so lightly tossed to him by the accident of an air raid would survive and out-distance any combination of disasters.

The war could break him into as many small pieces as the explosive energy of trinitro-toluol might command, but every one of those pieces would mount into space as a separate messenger of rejoicing.

He shook his fist at the masked lamp post.

"A few hours ago I was like you," he said aloud, "all blacked out and dim. But now!" Exultantly he beat his fists together. "Now!"

Why had he left so soon? It was only a little after one o'clock. Why hadn't he stopped on and on and on.

What crazy impulse of courtesy and good manners had driven him politely forth with the night so young and himself aware for the first time of being alive?

Was it too late to return and demand admittance? To be ruled by convention in time of war was insanity.

He would have gone back like a shot had he felt himself capable of explanation. But he knew himself to be incapable. A man shaking from head to foot with a new found joy like the blade of a trembler coil is in no condition to deal with explanations on a doorstep. Besides Joan might not answer the bell. He might have Lady Miller or Rogers or Freddie to deal with. To say "I have left my loves behind" would be inadequate and obviously the real motive was unexplainable.

But something would have to be done.

Sleep was out of the question.

"If only the shops were open," he lamented. "If one could buy something."

A present.

Better walk—walk—that was the thing to do.

It was not a bad alternative to tramp through deserted streets in company with the realization that was his.

With thirty-three inch strides he set off, and the pavements rang beneath his feet. He felt that he would never again know fatigue or dullness. From that moment the stream of life, the much or little of it that might be left to him, would overflow. A new source of life had come into being within himself, divine and inspired by Joan's laughing eyes and mouth, her insolence, courage and understanding. He could feel it bubbling within him like spring water in a pool. The exquisite refreshment was almost more than he could bear in silence.

As he tramped he could hear it tinkling merrily beneath his feet. He had gone a hundred yards before realizing that the pavements were littered with broken glass, flinders of thousands of panes blasted from windows by the shock of explosions.

At the bottom of Clarges street a squad of L. C. C. men were busy with brooms clearing up the mess. As they swept the glass jingled like wind bells.

He paused a moment listening to the queer rhythmic music they made. Across the way was a house in which a ray of light showed palely beneath a lowered blind.

Paula's house. And the light came from her room.

So she, too, was awake, doubtless going over and over in her mind those few crazy moments they had spent together at the Carlton. What ages ago it seemed—so far off as to have lost reality.

A pitiful business it had been. A woman who offered an man who could not accept. Nothing more pitiful than that. Yet but for Paula—but for that sudden unrestraint of hers what had happened to him since would not have been.

He owed her something for that—something transcending ordinary gratitude—and something which could never be expressed. He had run away from love only to find it. There was irony in that. What was it Browning had written?

God above is great to grant us mighty to make

And creates the love to reward the love—

"Does He?" Harley wondered, knowing how often it was not so, yet praying that in one case at least it should prove true.

He hesitated before moving on. Searching his mind for some easing kindly thing to say to her from the pavement. But he knew he would not find it.

Seeing him below her window at that small hour she would inevitably misunderstand his impulse.

Every lover wants his world to be happy, too, and as Harley shook his head and moved on to Piccadilly a shadow of regret went with him.

At the corner one of the sweepers touched his cap with that gregarious impulse common to those who work late in deserted streets.

"Made a proper mess, 'aven't they?" he remarked.

Harley nodded.

"You've got your work cut out."

"That's right," said the man, "I wouldn't 'arf mind bein' a glazier to-morrer—O! dear! Eh?"

And spurred by the incentive of his own wit he plied his broom with renewed vigor.

Further along Piccadilly was a hole in the wood paving where a bomb had burst.

A policeman was watching over it with an air of implacable resolution that suggested it would be no fault of his if the hole filled itself up during the night.

Harley asked if any one had been hurt.

"It's not for me to answer that, sir, and it's not for you to arst," was the sober reply, not unmixed with suspicion.

"Good man," said Harley, and pursued his way across Leicester square towards Covent Garden.

At Long Acre a barrier had been erected and fire engines were still at work. The helmets of firemen and the nozzles and unions of hoses gleamed mysteriously through misty plumes of smoke. A burst water main and a burst gas main were sending up parallel jets of fire and water. The sight had attracted a group of spectators largely composed of Covent Garden porters and aged vagrants. Carts and lorries piled high with vegetables and boxes of flowers for the market were huddled in Garrick street waiting for the barriers to come down. A special constable whom Harley recognized as a leading west end actor manager was endeavoring to park them in some better shape.

"Lorries on the right—horse-drawn vehicles on the left" sounded the familiar voice. "Now, come along, my boys, come along. What is the use of my talking if you take no notice?"

What, indeed?

"Damnation, am I to waste my voice for nothing?"

Seemingly so.

A lad of 16 with the frightened eyes of one in the presence of an emergency with which he found himself powerless to cope loomed out of the mists of Floral street and stood irresolutely before Harley, gnawing the back of his hand.

"What's the matter sonny?" said Harley, recognizing the signs of approaching panic. "What's the trouble?"

"Dunno what to do, sir. My retailer as gone up—flattened out—cruel it is. Plise is burnin' still. Yesterday's onions poppin' off chestnuts. What'd I better do with that?" And he jerked his thumb towards a one horse cart piled with wooden boxes.

"What is it? Vegetables?"

"Nar. Flars. Roses and sech like. E ain't there to take 'em, see? For I knows 'e may be—" the boy's lower lip shot out suggestively.

Harley clapped a hand on his shoulder. "Steady on, youngster," he said. "Don't start looking for terrors. Flowers you've got, eh?"

"Yus. Tain't like vegs, flars ain't. Got to sell 'em quick ain't yer?"

Harley's eyes wandered lovingly towards the cart.

"If it's a customer you want," he said, "I'm your man. How much for the lot?"

"Fifteen pahund, but yer kidding."

Harley fished three fivers from his pocket.

"Does this look like business?"

The youth eyed man and money in slow turns.

"But yer can't find no use fer all the blinkin' lot," said he.

"Can't I?" was the reply. "You don't know what I can do when the mood takes me. Freeze on to these notes and I'll tell ye where to go."

In war time transport is transport, and the spectacle of an office-rider on a market cart was not unusual enough to attract notice.

Seated beside the boy, Harley was driven down Piccadilly and thence to Berkeley Square.

"Here we are," he said, as they came to the Miller's house, "and if you care to earn a couple of sovereigns for yourself you can lend me a hand."

It must be confessed that at first the boy entered with poor spirit and no small apprehension into the surprising business demanded of him. But later, with the realization that he was acting in concert with a man physically superior to any policeman who might feel impelled to intervene, he embraced the spirit of the enterprise with an enthusiasm only second to Harley's. The area railings, the knocker, the piers which supported the porch, the old wrought iron link holder, in short, everything that could be reached from pavement to the height obtainable by standing on a man's shoulders, was festooned with roses like a decorated car in a battle of flowers.

Only one interruption distracted their operations. It came from an elderly special constable who, to do him justice, was more occupied with surprise than fear that the law was being infringed.

"Do these decorations presage an early peace, young man, or have you and your companion taken leave of your sense?" he asked, blandly.

"I can only speak for myself," said Harley. "The boy is sane enough."

"Odd, very odd," said the special.

Harley said they could do with extra help and invited assistance, but the special shook his head.

"Although," he admitted, "it would be pleasanter than the task that awaits me. For I am on my way to guard an electric light works from the back door of a fish shop."

Harley tossed him a rose.

"For luck, sir."

The old man accepted the gift gracefully. "You would not care to tell me what all this is for?" he asked.

"A love filtre," said Harley.

"Then you will allow me to wish you the best of luck."

What remained of the flowers were tenderly bestowed in the area—a pyramid of boxes which rose high above the level of the kitchen window.

Georgia's Aviation Family

Georgia Aviator Foresees Transportation of Freight and Express By Air in Near Future.

By Valco Lyle.

ATHERS, GA.—America has her 100 per cent aviator, Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, and now she has a 100 per cent aviation family.

Athens claims the honor of rearing the first 100 per cent aviation family in this country, the youngest aviator in America, and the youngest Georgia girl to take flying lessons.

Ben T. Epps, who was the first Georgian to fly a plane in the state, and who is one of the nation's pioneer aviators, has seven children, five boys and two girls, and each of them is learning to fly as soon as he or she acquires enough aviation knowledge and physical strength to manage a plane.

Ben T. Epps, Jr., 13, oldest boy of the family, is believed to be the youngest pilot in America. He took his solo flight three months ago, and now takes regular flights over the city and to nearby towns.

He weighs about 100 pounds, and is very popular with his young schoolmate friends, who regard him as a young genius, but always a friendly comrade. After school hours, when he is not with his father in the latter's shops or at the aviation field, Ben may be seen riding about town with eight or ten of his playmates piled on his

The funny contraption seen in the picture is not a go-cart, but an airplane designed by Ben T. Epps, Athens, Georgia's first air pilot, and pioneer aviator. Mr. Epps made the plane in his shops during 1907, shortly after the first successful flights by the famous Wright brothers. The plane was only partially successful in flight. Mr. Epps, who was barely 20 years old at the time, is shown standing by the plane, which had a two-cylinder Anzane motor.

The picture has other things of interest besides the plane. The barrel to the left of the garage, which was the first in Athens, served as the first gasoline filling station in Georgia. The picture also shows Washington street, one of the main business thoroughfares, unpaved.

little "Cutdown Special," which he constructed himself, having bought the materials with money acquired from selling hot-dogs, candies, and drinks at the local field. "I want to become an experienced pilot, like papa, and I am going to give all my time to flying when I grow up," Ben, Jr. says. He is a freshman at the Athens High school, where he is reported to be very adept with his books, having entered in September.

Evelyn Epps, pretty 15-year old daughter, and oldest child of Mr. and Mrs. Epps, is the youngest Georgia girl to begin aviation lessons. She had her first instruction under her father about three weeks ago.

Miss Epps is also setting a precedent for Athens girls. So far as can be ascertained, she is the first local girl to take flying instruction. Quite a number of Athens' young men have taken lessons, some of whom are regular pilots now. Among these are Edward Hamulton, football and baseball player at the University of Georgia. Ed, as he is best known by his friends, began instruction about two years ago, upon graduating from the Athens High school. He flies one of Mr. Epps' planes regularly now, taking up passengers nearly every day.

Like Ben, Jr., Evelyn has high hopes of an aviation career. "I want to become a full fledged licensed pilot and fly regularly," she says.

She has finished her junior year at the Athens High school, where she made a high average in her studies.

"I never have any fear when any of the children are taking instructions or flights," Mrs. Epps says. "I suppose it is because I have grown used to aviation, since Mr. Epps was a pilot before we married. I did not object when Evelyn began taking lessons, as I feel that she will be able to control a plane as well as Ben, Jr."

Mr. Epps, who operates a flying school at the local field, says that he intends to teach all of his children how to fly a plane as soon as each becomes large enough. Mary Virginia, age 11, will be the next in line for instruction. She is restlessly waiting her turn, and is intent on learning younger than Evelyn. The baby, William Douglas, 14 months old, and named after Doug Davis, nationally known aviator, took his first flight about three weeks ago, his mother holding him in her arms. He was amazed at his new adventure at first, Mrs. Epps said, but soon began to laugh and enjoy it. He fell asleep after being aloft about ten minutes.

Transportation of light freight and express by air will be a common thing in the near future, Mr. Epps thinks. "I don't believe, however," he avers, "that it will ever be practicable to carry heavy freight by airplane."

Mr. Epps is one of the oldest aviators in the country. He began experiments shortly after the Wright brothers began their experiments, which lead to the first successful plane. It was from the latter's experiments at Kitty Hawk, N. C., along in 1904-05 that led Mr. Epps into the study of aviation, an entirely new field-of endeavor at that time. He read stories of their work, and set to work on experiments of his own. One of Mr. Epps' prize possessions is a picture of a plane designed by him in 1907. It was only partially successful in flight. The picture shows Washington street, near Lumpkin street, before pavement was laid. It also shows a barrel which served as Athens' first gasoline station.

Having begun in his teens, Mr. Epps has been making experiments, building, and repairing planes in his shops here for the past 25 years. He constructed one plane in which he used a motorcycle motor. The plane was successful and is in use now. He is constructing a new plane in his shop, and plans to use a Ford motor in it.

Hero of 1,000 "Extra Thrillers"

'After Half a Century of Adventure, William H. Blackburne Is Still in the Wild Animal Game. But He Is No Longer Making the "Grand Entry Parade" in a Cage of Fear-Crazed Lions; For Twoscore Years, Now, He Has Been the Only Keeper of Uncle Sam's Only Zoo.

By Cora deForest Grant

THE great Barnum & Bailey circus was making its first trip to England. The vast hippodrome of the old Olympic in London was filled to capacity. Under the blaze of lights Queen Victoria and the Prince of Wales sat in the Royal Box, the center of an eager, expectant crowd waiting to see their first American circus.

A blast of trumpets, a roll of drums and a deafening blare of brass bands announced the "Grand Entry" and the "Greatest Show on Earth" began its slow, imposing march around the arena.

In a gilded cage near the front of the column rode William H. Blackburne, wild animal trainer, and four tawny lions.

To the crack of a blacksnake whip Blackburne put his savage beasts through their customary paces. Growing and snarling, they vaulted over a three-slat gate which the trainer held in position in the center of the cage. From opposite sides of the inclosure the lions moved in pairs—four massive yellow bodies passing in a flying leap each time they hurdled. Swirling, hurdling, swirling, hurdling, the performance was intended to keep up until that long, slow parade around the arena had been completed.

Suddenly something happened—how or why the trainer never knew. But one of the lions missed his cue, as acrobats sometimes do, and his head crashed through the "property gate." A jagged, broken slat pierced each side of the beast's great shaggy head.

Instantly bedlam reigned in that iron barred cage. The injured lion tore back and forth, struggling to free himself from his tortuous neck. Thrown completely out of control by his unexpected turn of events, the three other lions joined in mad pursuit, snarling and snapping in their panic.

There was no hope of bringing the beasts back under control. The trainer's only chance of safety lay in avoiding those four lions, suddenly gone mad. With a spring he leaped straight upward and caught at the overhead bars that formed a ventilator in the ceiling. He missed. He leaped again, with better luck, and there he clung with his legs drawn up close around his body while the "Grand Entry" parade continued its agonizingly slow course around the arena.

"And judging from the wild burst of applause," said Mrs. Blackburne, "the audience evidently thought it was all part of the act—the usual climax of the parade. But I was beginning to think I'd never get out of that arena alive."

That was nearly half a century ago, and the hero of that story—now past three score and ten—is still in the wild animal game. No longer is he making that slow ride around the arena in a cage filled with lions. Today he is the only keeper of Uncle Sam's only zoo, a position he has held for nearly 40 years.

I was talking with him just a short time ago. He was stroking the head of a giant ostrich, blind and decrepit now, but once the proud gift of an Abyssinian king to a president of the United States.

"I'm worried about this old fellow," said Mr. Blackburne. "When he went totally blind four years ago it was his familiarity with every inch of this cage, where he had lived for 20 years, that saved him from beating out his life. And now we've got to transfer him to a new cage."

They presented an odd picture, these two, as the keeper, with one arm under the ostrich's wing, gently stroked the bird's sightless eyes and talked to him in a quiet, soothing voice. The keeper was assuring his frightened charge that he had no cause to fear, that though he was leaving his old cage, which he had come to know so well, he would still be able to find his way around. For the new cage had been constructed in exact replica of the bird's old home; everything—the feed box, the windows, the door—is precisely the same, with now new, unfamiliar obstacles to confuse him.

It was moving day in the nation's zoo, and Mr. Blackburne was guiding his old friend to his new home. It was necessary for all the occupants of one of the oldest frame buildings to find other quarters, for on this site Uncle Sam intends to build a modern fireproof structure, for which congress has appropriated a quarter of a million dollars. The new building will be known as the reptile house, and the former occupants, belonging to the feathered world, must find shelter in temporary quarters, for although the new bird house is only two years old and contains 145 indoor cages, it is filled to capacity.

Uncle Sam has only begun his building program. In addition to the reptile house, congress has received recommendations to build a pachyderm house, a small mammal house, a wild cattle house, bear and monkey pits and extensions on the new bird house and the carnivore house. They will cost more than a million dollars—but all are needed to house and properly exhibit the zoo's present crowded population.

It is a far cry from this ambitious building program to the day, almost two score years ago, when William Blackburne bid farewell to circus life as keeper of the "finest and largest collection of traveling animals the world ever saw," and transferred his affections to a "sad looking lot" of birds and beasts in the back yard of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

He had been with the circus for ten years, having begun his long association with animals in captivity before 1882, the year in which Columbia won the distinction of being the first baby elephant ever born in the United States. Columbia's precedence of birth was not her only distinction; this infant daughter of the monstrous Asiatic elephant Hebe precipitated the Barnum & Bailey consolidation and made possible the "Greatest Show on Earth." For Columbia was born in Atlantic City in the winter quarters of the Cooper & Bailey Circus—and that spring the Barnum Circus was compelled to go west for business. Columbia was drawing all the eastern circus fans to Cooper & Bailey's show.

When the consolidation was effected, in 1883, Mr. Blackburne was retained in charge of the animals. That year Jumbo, the big African elephant, was purchased from the London zoo. "The largest body of live flesh that ever moved to the United States," Mr. Blackburne said, and incidentally he and the engineer and fireman of the train that catapulted this 20,000 pounds of flesh to instant death were the only witnesses of the tragedy that killed Jumbo and broke the leg of Tom Thumb, a baby elephant.

That was back in September, 1885. The Barnum & Bailey circus train was loading across the main track of the railroad in St. Thomas, Canada. All of the animals were aboard except Jumbo, whose powerful strength was used in loading, and little Tom Thumb, who always affectionately tagged after the giant. Suddenly a whistle sounded a warning, and around the bend came an unexpected express freight. Jumbo seemed to sense his danger. With a mighty bellow, he lifted his huge trunk high in the air, stretched his enormous ears straight out and bolted—straight down the middle of the track. At his heels tagged Tom Thumb.

Mr. Blackburne raced with death in a vain effort to get Jumbo off the track. "But the elephant was running straight ahead, just as terrified runaway horses gallop blindly," said the keeper. The inevitable crash came. Jumbo was killed instantly and the engine and three cars of the fast express were derailed; but in some miraculous way Tom Thumb was lifted into the air and dropped down an embankment, "where the little fellow lay yelping and squealing over a broken leg just like a baby." The young elephant's leg was set in a plaster cast and he was "invalided home" to Central Park, where he grew to maturity. Jumbo was mounted and for several years continued to follow the circus, creating almost as much interest as if he had been alive. Today his massive skeleton may be seen in the American Museum of Natural History in New York, while his hide is on exhibition in the Boston Museum.

During the years of circus tramping that followed, Blackburne was to experience hundreds of other adventures—"extra thrillers" that were never scheduled on the official programs. One of them occurred during the "Great Free Street Parade" in a western city. Blackburne was seated on a folding iron stool in a cage with a big spotted leopard when the parade halted for a moment. During the brief pause a woman holding a small child in her arms pressed close to the cage to let "baby see the beautiful kitty." The leopard stretched, snarled, and the next instant its claw-tipped paws were clutched on the sides of the baby's face.

Folding his stool as he leaped, Blackburne slipped this canvas covered iron shield between the two faces, drawing so close together. But he could not prevent the four razor-like slashes that appeared on each side of the child's face—for "once a leopard sets his claws," says Mr. Blackburne, "he does not let go." The child was saved, but disfigured for life. The baby's mother accepted a settlement which included tickets to the circus; and that night the baby, bandaged until only his fever brightened eyes peeped out between folds of white gauze, came to the circus.

The "extra thriller" in another street parade was humorous as seen in retrospect, but when it occurred it did not impress Mr. Blackburne as being so funny.

Dressed in a Roman tunic of black and gold, with a kilted skirt, the trainer was seated in a cage with four lions on leash, when a terrific storm broke. The lightning flashed and the thunder boomed and rolled across the heavens in a continuous deafening bombardment, while the rain poured in torrents.

One of the lions, an "amiable creature" that had always evidenced signs of fear when it stormed, became completely terrified. Straining and pulling at his leash with all his mighty strength, he broke his bonds and rushed to the trainer's side, where he buried his head under the kilted skirt. Blackburne arose ever so easily—for quick movements are not tolerated by jungle folk—and, talking in soothing tones all the time, backed slowly toward the door of the partition—the lion following step by step, still holding his head under the sheltering skirt.

"He acted as if he knew I was his friend and would protect him," said Mr. Blackburne, "but I never believed in putting too much strain on friendship. So, once within easy reach of that door, I made a flying leap and slammed shut the protecting bars."

Mr. Blackburne has another story about a lion who displayed real friendship. "He was born in captivity, raised on a baby's bottle and had for a playmate a big domestic house cat," said Mr. Blackburne, "and he was the most lovable animal I ever knew. He used to let me put my head in his mouth, without harming a hair. And, what is more astounding, he was the only lion I ever knew who would pay the slightest attention to a human while he was eating. When I appeared he would leave his dinner—the choicest, reddest, rawest chunks of meat—and come to the bars to rub against me and lick my hands. It sounds like a simple thing, but really it's wonderful to any one who knows animals, for they are more or less ferocious when they eat."

Then, after years of friendship this lion was exchanged. A year or more passed before Mr. Blackburne saw him again. Then, being in the same city, he went out to see his old friend. It was feeding time. The lions were nervously pacing their cages as the crowd pressed against the railing, waiting to see the feast. From the midst of the crowd the visiting trainer called the lion's name—called again and waited. The restless pacing stopped; the lion looked out over the crowd and sniffed. Then the oldtime meowing began, and kept up until his old friend had come up against the bars. There the lion stood and joyously licked his former trainer's hands, paying not the slightest attention to his portion of meat when it was pushed through the bars.

A slightly different story is that of the two frightened wolves that "joined up with the circus." They seemed to feel that they hadn't a friend in that whole menagerie, but each day the trainer would sit by their cage, talking quietly to them. At first they resented his presence; but gradually their attitude changed. And Mr. Blackburne tried sitting very still in the open door of their cage, while the wolves crept closer—sniffing. So the friendship grew.

Then one day the wolves escaped from their cage. They took refuge in a dark corner, where, growling and snapping, they held the guards at bay. The trainer was hurriedly summoned. Ordering the guards out of sight, he sat down near by and began his quiet talk. Gradually they crept near—sniffing, sniffing; and when they both were sufficiently close he "dragged" each wolf by the "off ear" and jerked their heads outward, away from him, until the guards could rush up. "They were just a minute in coming to the rescue," he said, "but that minute tested every bit of strength I possessed."

Long years ago there occurred a demonstration of the ingenuity which was to mark William Blackburne throughout his life. The Barnum & Bailey Circus was making its first ocean voyage, and in the ship's hold all of the lions, tigers, panthers, hyenas and pumas were caged. During a severe storm at sea the alarm was given that a puma was loose. He had crawled under a low slung wagon held securely against the wall, and there he crouched.

On the top of the wagon Blackburne crouched, too, a lariat in his steady hand. With perfect accuracy the noose was slipped over the puma's head. To pull the snarling animal from beneath the wagon was not a difficult job; but to prevent the beast from attacking every one within reach as he came out into the open was another matter.

Blackburne solved this problem on his own unique way. Removing one end of a barrel, he made a small hole in the opposite end, ran the rope through the hole and began pulling on the rope. Mr. Puma could either allow himself to be choked to death or he could sink into the barrel. He chose the latter course, and, as he disappeared inside, alert guards slapped on the loose end. It then was a simple matter to pull Mr. Puma back into his cage. For ten years Mr. Blackburne traveled over the United States, through England and the rest of Europe with the circus. Then homesickness took possession of him, and just when congress was enacting legislation to establish a National Zoological Park in Washington "the man for the job" came home.

A sulphur crested cockatoo, a few parrots, four bears, three wolves, one puma, some pairie dogs and four or five monkeys comprised the little cavalcade that William Blackburne marched bravely out to Rock Creek Park from the back yard of the Smithsonian Institution in 1891. Out to the place where he was destined to become the keeper of one of the world's leading zoos; where the collection of animals was to grow to include some 3,000 birds, reptiles and mammals; where great paddocks and ranges were to be built for buffalo and deer and other large mammals; where lakes and pools were to be dug for waterfowl and seals and beavers; where towering outdoor flight cages were to climb upward over tree-tops, to accommodate great condors and eagles and other large sized birds; while shelter houses for species requiring warmth and special care were to spring up all over the wooded hillsides in that vast natural park.

So well has he builded from such a small beginning that every year now three million men, women and children visit the zoo. And this year 30,886 students in organized classes from 497 different schools have come to study zoology.

He has traveled over the world acquiring animals to bring the nation's collection to its present size. The other day he recalled a trip he made to Africa in 1913 to purchase some animals from the Egyptian government.

The animals Uncle Sam's one-time circus man brought back to America included two elephants, two cheetahs, an Arabian baboon, three camels and several antelopes—in all 26 crates of animals. And despite seasickness and the hardship of unaccustomed travel, every animal survived that long trip from Cairo to Washington.

The years that he has spent at Rock Creek Park also have brought their adventures, their stories. Almost daily he has had to meet emergencies, many of which brought unexpected danger. And many of those emergencies have been conquered with characteristic Blackburne ingenuity.

There is the story of manhandling a yak. The feet of huffed animals in captivity not infrequently become elongated, causing severe pain. The usual method of correcting this condition is to clip the hooves, after the animal has been roped and thrown to the ground. But this practice is dangerous—shoulders or hip bones may be broken or dislocated. So, when Uncle Sam's largest and finest yak began showing signs of this trouble the keeper conceived the idea of building a narrow cement walk the length of the paddock. The yak did the rest. Day by day, as he paced back and forth, impatiently waiting for feeding time, he filed his own hoofs on the rough cement walk. The plan worked so satisfactorily that later when a mountain zebra and an African antelope developed the same trouble cement walks were laid in their paddocks, with similarly successful results.

Then there was the lady hippopotamus with her temper tantrums. The favorite pastime of Mrs. Hippo was to tear long gashes in the tough hide of Mr. Hippo every time they disagreed. And, judging from the poor fellow's appearance (he looked like a cross-patch quilt) they disagreed pretty often. But Mr. Blackburne fixed Mrs. Hippo. He tied open her huge mouth and filed off the sharp points of her teeth until they were rounded and dull and harmless. But whether it is orthodontia or just plain dentistry, this resourceful keeper meets every emergency. The extraction of teeth is a common practice at the zoo; but it is a rare occasion when the pulling of a tooth is actually welcomed. However, such an experience was witnessed not long ago. The Bengal tiger, a tawny, handsome beast, had the toothache, and he paced back and forth shaking his massive head from side to side like a great pendulum.

To rope and tie this struggling animal securely was a dangerous and extremely difficult job, but at last the feat was accomplished, and with the aching tooth extracted the tiger was freed from pain. A short time passed and another tooth developed trouble. This time the Bengal seemed to know that the huge forceps meant release from pain; and he laid down quietly, opened his immense mouth as wide as he could and waited for the second extraction.

The nearly 40 years during which he has built Uncle Sam's zoo up to its present greatness have been kind to the only keeper that zoo has ever had. He is grizzled and gray now, and he is past the allotted three-score years and ten—but he is of fine physical strength and endurance, and he is just as actively on the job as he has always been from the very day the zoo was established.

In his office in the cupola of the lion house, with the roar of the jungle chorus forever in his ears, he sits and looks back over a half a century spent with wild animals, and he regards it as a very pleasant half century. The years have taught him that all living creatures, be they humans or beasts of the jungle, can be handled more successfully by kindness and a bit of diplomacy than by force and brutality.

In a covered glass bowl on his desk a hairy black tarantula dances fantastically and unceasingly. Down in a box beside the radiator is a tiny bear cub, no larger than a good sized rat. It is snuggled down under a warm blanket and it nurses expertly from a baby's milk bottle.

"This poor little cuss was unwelcome," the keeper explains. "We had to rescue him from his mother."

There, in that fitting setting, William Blackburne looks back over the past—half century filled with high adventure and long friendships with animals. He has a fund of animal stories and as he talks to you he punctuates his conversation with them—stories of every animal that lives in captivity, its strange temper tantrums, its unexpected docility, its fearlessness.

But, oddly enough, his best story doesn't have for its hero a lordly lion, or a tiger, or a leopard—but a plain, ordinary cat; and despite his long years of association with animals, it was left until just a short time ago for him to witness what was perhaps the most dramatic incident of bravery he has ever seen.

A domestic house cat, the proud mother of two kittens, was wandering leisurely past the black leopard's cage. She turned about just in time to see both of her babies slip inquisitively through the bars that held captive "the meanest animal in the zoo."

Without a moment's hesitation the little mother leaped through the bars, straight onto the back of the stalking "black devil." From this strategic point she set up a frantic hissing, spitting and scratching while her alarmed babies, apparently understanding her danger signals, scampered out of the cage. Then, before the disconcerted leopard could decide what to do about the diabolical thing that clung so tenaciously to his back, the mother cat made another flying leap, this time to the farthest side of the cage—and flew out through the bars to rejoin her frightened kittens.

There on the sidewalk, secure from danger—with their backs arched, their tails up and their fur all bristled out—the three strutted along defiantly, for all the world as if they were saying: "Who told that guy he was a fighter?"

When Justice Triumphed

Four studies of Red Moran, the scrawny, maladjusted young criminal who thought himself a coming Napoleon of the underworld.

The late Edward Byrnes.

The Passing of Red Moran, Sullen Product of Poverty Who Sneered at the Chair

HISTORY abounds in megalomaniacs, particularly criminal history. Megomania, which is defined as a passion for doing great or grand things, a form of mental alienation in which the patient has grandiose delusions concerning himself, appears to be the outstanding characteristic of almost every criminal. Young criminals almost invariably are subject to this disease.

But is it insanity?
That is an important question because the central character of this story to be narrated today appears to have been an out-and-out megalomaniac. He was a scrawny, sullen, maladjusted product of poverty, who had not even reached the voting age, but he thought himself a coming Napoleon of the underworld.

Boastful in the extreme, he felt that he was a most daring desperado, one of the terrors of his time. We can believe that he got the thrill of a lifetime out of sneering and jeering at the electric chair.

But was he insane?
The first scene of this tragedy took place in a Brooklyn street on the afternoon of November 19, 1926. Patrolman Edward Byrnes of the Poplar street police station was driving a police car south on Hicks street when he observed a new gray sedan ahead of him. He thought the car contained two men in the front seat and two in the rear, but it was established later that there were five in the car, three of them in the rear seat.

As he looked at the machine, and its occupants, he thought he saw the glint of a pistol barrel.

Byrnes followed the sedan. When he reached Middagh street, where Patrolman Frank Daszkiewicz was stationed to assist school children across the street—it was about 3:45 o'clock—he signaled to Daszkiewicz and the latter got into the car beside him. Byrnes speeded up beside the sedan, ordered the driver to pull over to the curb, and then shot his car ahead and in front of the sedan. It came to a stop.

THE DOORS OF THE CAR FLY OPEN.

The two officers climbed out of the police car. Neither drew his pistol. Byrnes was a pace or two ahead of his brother officer. They approached the sedan.

Suddenly the two doors of the car flew open and one or more of the occupants opened fire on the officers. Byrnes pitched forward on his face. The occupants leaped from the sedan. As Daszkiewicz reached for his gun there was a second deadly volley. Daszkiewicz staggered, two bullets in his stomach. His legs sagged. He fought to retain consciousness.

As the driver of the sedan, the last man out of the car, leaped out, Daszkiewicz seized him and with all his waning strength clung to his man. His captive struck out blindly with his fists. But Daszkiewicz held on.

One of those in the neighborhood who heard the pistol shots was Vincent Carney, of 176 Hicks street. He came running, to the patrolman's aid.

"For God's sake, hold him!" gasped the officer. Then he slumped back unconscious.

Carney grappled with the fellow. He was still holding him there when other officers arrived. They immediately concluded that he himself was one of the murderers and took him into custody. It was several hours, not until Daszkiewicz regained consciousness, before Carney was cleared of suspicion.

But the police department was to do nobly by Vincent Carney. The officers of the Brooklyn department later gave him a gold watch and $1,326. And Commissioner McLaughlin got him a job.

The prisoner gave his name as James Lacurto. He was an undersized youth who had already served terms in three prisons for burglary and automobile thefts. His story was that he had hired the sedan from the Brooklyn U-Drive-It Company and that three men had later accosted him and asked him if he would like to make some money. When he said he would, they climbed in and directed him to drive to various addresses.

He said they would leave the car, go into a place, and then return, saying, "It wasn't worth it." Then they would go on to another place.

Patrolman Byrnes died almost instantly. Daszkiewicz died on the 22d. Byrnes would have been 27 on November 21. His wife had died two months before, leaving two small children. Daszkiewicz was 33 and left a wife and three children, aged 8, 6 and 6 months. The families of the officers later received The News heroism award.

In the meanwhile the police department worked fast. Detectives located Ida Abitante, Lacurto's sweetheart, with whom he had been living. Then they arrested James De Michaels, 18, who confessed to various hold-ups; but denied he had taken part in the double killing on the 19th; and also Robert Tate, 27, suspected of being a member of the same gang. It was said that Anthony Marchia, lately committed to Sing Sing, had also worked with the same gang that killed Byrnes and Daszkiewicz.

On the night of November 22 Lieutenant Robert Thurston was making an entry in the police blotter in the Empire boulevard station in Brooklyn when a disheveled, hungry looking youth, much in need of a haircut, walked into the station and stood before Thurston.

"Any detectives around?" he inquired. "Look in the detective room," said the lieutenant.

The young man—he hardly seemed more than 16—looked, then came back.

"Ain't none there," he announced. "Wait a minute—I'll get you one," said Thurston.

"O, I guess you'll do," said the visitor then. "I'm Red Moran. I'm the guy that bumped off them two cops last Friday."

Now as it happened, this lad had not been a stranger to the police. Twice before he had been charged with grand larceny. Once he had been discharged. The other time he had been found guilty, received a suspended sentence, and been placed on probation. He had finished with school when he was 14, served for a while in the navy, and then thrown himself wholeheartedly into a career of thuggery in Brooklyn.

He admitted to the police, quite proudly,

The late Frank Daszkiewicz.

that he had taken part in a couple of dozen holdups, including sixteen taxi drivers and six drug stores.

EYES ARE DEEP-SET, MOUTH IS SNEERING.

Twenty years old, though looking much younger, his predominant features were his sullen, smoldering, deep-set eyes and perpetually sneering mouth. He seemed to exude hatred. Almost never in the months that followed did he relax from his contemptuous, indifferent attitude toward the world in general and the authorities in particular. He apparently felt quite certain that everybody was very much afraid of him.

Since the shooting on Hicks street he had wandered about, day and night, not daring to show himself where he might be recognized and seized. Possessing but $4.40 when he fled the scene, the money had soon vanished. He had no comfortable and secure hideout—his criminality had not yet reached that organized state. And so, tired and hungry, he had decided to make that contemptuous gesture and give himself up. "What the hell—I'll be dead in a year," he said. "I ain't afraid of de chair!"

According to the police, young Moran had served as gunman for a robbery mob composed of seven members. Moran told them that on the day Byrnes and Daszkiewicz were shot he and the others were on their way to hold up a dentist. "We heard he always had a lot of money on him," he said. "You're a fool for ever thinking you could beat this game." District Attorney Dodd told him. His reply was the sneering, oft-repeated retort, "Well, you can send me to the chair right away—I don't care."

According to his mother, Mrs. Margaret Moran, a hard-working woman, prematurely aged from labor, Thomas had begun to wander about 18 months before. It was largely through her tearful pleas that the court had given him a suspended sentence and put him on probation. She said she had got down on her knees to him and pleaded with him to change his ways.

But he had tasted power, experienced the sinister thrills of criminality. Besides, he had a girl friend. Soon after his surrender, he signed a confession, and the next day pleaded guilty to two indictments charging murder. Such a plea not being allowed, when the charge is first degree murder, it was changed to not guilty. Asked if he had a lawyer, he replied disdainfully that he didn't want no lawyer—what did he want a lawyer for? Let them get it over with—he wasn't afraid.

An hour later Moran, Lacurto, De Michaels and Tate pleaded guilty to indictments charging grand larceny in the first degree and assault in the second. Lacurto, being a fourth offender, faced life imprisonment under the Baumes law. District Attorney Dodd pointed out this fact to Supreme Court Justice Alonzo J. McLaughlin.

"Why shouldn't they all get life?" the court inquired.

Dodd said that De Michaels and Tate had never been convicted before.

Later Lacurto received life imprisonment, and the other two twenty to forty years each, Moran alone being held for murder. The court appointed Peter Smith and Albert Conway to defend the youth, much to the prisoner's disgust. Moran's attitude was that it was all just a lot of foolishness. And where did they get that stuff, saying he was insane?

However, if he was to be defended, there was no other defense but an insanity defense.

His behavior is certainly irrational," said the lawyers. "He won't even talk to us!"

Another member of the gang, Michael Cahill, 19, gave himself up on November 26 and admitted that he had been in the death car. He said he had taken no part in the shooting, and that none of the others had, except Red. "He must be crazy," said Cahill. "He pulled that gun before any of us knew what it was all about. He didn't give those cops a chance in the world."

After some delays, caused by examinations into the accused youth's sanity, the trial opened on January 24, 1927, before Judge George W. Martin in Kings county court. Assistant District Attorney James I. Cuff was the prosecutor and the defense lawyers were Smith and his law partner, Dominic Griffin. The jury was what is commonly known as a "blue ribbon" jury, being composed of citizens of a higher intelligence than usual.

The young hero of the drama, as he considered himself, parked his feet on the chair in front of him and dozed most of the time the jury was being chosen. His face bore an expression of proud boredom. What was the sense of all this, anyway? He'd confessed, hadn't he? He bumped off those two cops—did any one dare to insinuate that he hadn't?

SMITH OPENS HIS INSANITY DEFENSE.

Defense Attorney Smith, in his opening address, stated that Moran had been abnormal ever since his head was hurt in a roller-skating accident at the age of 9.

Furthermore, said Smith, many of the Moran family had shown evidence of insanity. The boy's father had died of apoplexy, he said, a grandmother had died in an asylum, a grandfather had died in the Kings county hospital, his mother's brother had been a patient in an asylum, and his mother's sister also had been a patient in an asylum. A hereditary strain of insanity, said Smith.

"I have not been able to talk with my client," said the attorney. "He is insane. I shall call him as a witness but I have no idea what he will say or whether he will say anything."

The state completed its case quickly.

Signaling for a Lead Is One Proper Way to "Talk Across the Table"

By Shepard G. Barclay

ON'T talk across the table!" applies to conversation which may give a player a hint about his partner's hand. It epitomizes one of the fundamentals of bridge ethics, the injunction against giving unauthorized information.

Suggesting by word, gesture or facial expression, that partner lead a certain suit is about as banal as anything can be in the play of the game. But there are perfectly ethical and proper ways whereby the same result may be achieved on many occasions—use of the recognized signals of play.

The declarer has no reason to signal anybody, for he plays the dummy hand as well as his own. He knows just what cards are held by his side, also just what cards the adversaries hold. He knows where his strength lies, also his weakness. The defenders, on the other hand, are ignorant of how strong or weak their side may be. They, therefore, have ample reason to indicate to each other, by their various plays, everything they can about their hands, while declarer can afford to false-card at every chance and try to fool them if he can.

This gives the offensive side a tremendous advantage, reckoned as about a full trick to the hand among experts and something more than that among players who do not make full use of the signals available for interchange of facts. During the years, a regular code has been developed which is known by all skillful players, whereby they can frequently thwart the declarer by managing to tell each other what to do while still observing the strictest standards of ethics.

The most important of all the signals concerns the playing of cards which obviously can have no effect upon the winning of the trick to which they are played. In selecting the card to play in such cases, an unnecessarily high card is classed as an "encouraging card," a low one as a "discouraging card," the former suggesting that the player would like to "have his partner lead that suit, the latter suggesting the contrary. The playing of one such "useless" card is merely an indication one way or the other, but when a second useless card of the suit is played, the message becomes positive.

Playing against a spade contract, if your partner leads the king and follows with the ace, both of them winning the tricks, there is a capital chance to signal in event that you have the cards with which to do it. Holding only the eight and three of the suit and desiring to trump a third lead of it, the eight should be played to the first trick—an encouraging card—and the three on the next trick. This constitutes what is called the "high-low" signal, or "echo." The play of the eight indicated the desire for another lead, but was not an absolute request, so far as partner can tell, for the holding in your hand may have been the eight, nine and ten, in which case your ensuing play of the nine would show him you were not asking for a third lead of the suit.

In like manner, a player holding only the three and deuce could ask for a third lead of the suit by playing the three first and the two second. The three would look like a discouraging signal, but the following two would prove that a third lead was desired. The same signal should be given if a player wished to have the suit led a third time because he held the queen; thus, with queen, seven and five, he would play the seven first and the five second.

When discarding in cases where unable to follow suit, a player also may give signals. To discard a high card of a suit encourages partner to lead that suit, to discard low discourages its lead, to discard in the unnatural manner, higher card followed by lower of the same suit, is a positive request for lead of the suit. Sometimes, by making a low discard from each of two suits, a player can ask for the lead of another suit by the process of elimination. Thus, in a no-trump hand, declarer may be running a club suit; if you have two discards to make and want to ask for a heart lead, you can do it by throwing a low spade on one trick and a low diamond on the next; since you don't want those suits led, partner knows you wish the remaining one led up to you.

By using these signals reliably, partners will gain on the average an extra trick about every other hand when they play defensively.

Records in Danger

Records for number of trophies are already smashed, and still others for largest entry are expected when play begins two weeks from tomorrow in the second annual tournament of the American Bridge League, which this year will be held in the solariums along the boardwalk at Asbury Park. The chance to have a seaside vacation at the Jersey summer resort while battling with the puzzling pasteboards has lured entries from players of championship caliber all over the country, and many others of lesser degree as well.

Four national trophies are at stake, three of them brand new. One of these is a bronze statue of a maid playing bridge, done by the sculptress, Dorothy Rice, and given by the city as a national challenge trophy for teams of four contract players, to be played for at intervals of from 30 to 90 days. One is a gold cup donated by Baron Waldemar von Zedtwitz for contract quartets composed solely of players who have finished first or second in a general tournament of the league, the American Whist League or the Vanderbilt Cup, called the Masters' Trophy. One is a cup presented by Wilbur C. Whitehead for the women's pairs contract title. The one old trophy, now held by Chicagoans, is the Shepard G. Barclay Trophy for the team of four national championships at auction bridge for mixed teams of men and women.

State, county and local titles also will be decided, in addition to general open events for players who do not feel equal to striving for the various titles.

Bridge Intimacies

R. F. Foster, who was a noted whist writer before most of the bridge experts of today had ever shuffled a deck of cards, was one of this country's golf pioneers. Never a star player, he was adept at making trick shots with a niblick; could cut under a ball to give it about as near to a perpendicular loft as is possible. He obtained the same delight from mystifying his friends with this trick that he has displayed in concocting problems of play at whist and bridge.

A Law a Week

Too many cards in a quitted trick—Whenever it is suspected that any of the quitted tricks contain more than four cards, any player may count them face downward. If any be found to contain a surplus card, and any player be short, either opponent of the player who is short may face the trick, select the surplus card and restore it to the player who is short, but this does not change the ownership of the trick. The player who is short is answerable for any revoke, as if the missing card had been in his hand continuously. Should the side in whose tricks the surplus card is found have failed to keep its tricks properly segregated, either opponent of such side may select a card from the tricks improperly gathered and restore such card to the player who is short.

(Next week—A trick gathered by the wrong side.)

Contract Systems

South bid two hearts, North six hearts. What would you, as West, lead from these hands? What if North had bid seven hearts?

B
♠ Q 5 3	♥ 8 3	♦ J 10	♣ A 10 7 6 5 2

These hands involve the question of when to lead an ace against a slam bid. If the bid is for grand slam, the ace of clubs would be the best lead from either of these hands. But against the small slam, the ace should be led from hand B, but not from hand A.

When an ace is held in a long suit there is grave danger that the slam bidding side will trump it unless it is led at the very first opportunity. If anything else is led, the chances are probably ten to one that the declarer can take the trick in his hand or dummy, and then will manage to discard your ace suit from one hand or the other, for he probably is pretty short of that suit in one or both hands. When, however, the ace is held in a short suit, there is slight danger that the opponents can discard their losers in it. Holding on to the ace in this case makes it possible that it will later kill off a king or queen and thereby perhaps make a queen or jack good in partner's hand.

With both sides vulnerable, and West the dealer, how should the following hand be bid?

Since partner denied support for spades, it is certain he can trump the third round of spades, probably the second round. Hence from hand A the king should be led, followed by the ace and then, if partner has discarded on second round or has given a "come on" signal by playing a higher card on the first round than on the second, lead a third spade for him to ruff.

The likelihood of partner being able to ruff the second round of spades would cause some players to favor the lead of the ace of spades from hand B, followed by a small one, though more would prefer not to lead away from the tenace ace-queen and so would lead the top of partner's suit, the ten of clubs.

It is extremely unlikely, in spite of partner's denial, that he is utterly void of spades and so can trump the first round, so that a spade lead from hand C would be most unwise; the king of partner's club suit, followed by the four if the king wins, would be better tactics in this case.

The New Problem

Men Are Going on a Sar ---Will Out-Dazzle Wives

By SAM GIBSON.

GIRLS and ladies all, you're going to have a lot of new problems to solve this summer.

Selecting your clothes for the summer resorts—the beaches, the mountains and the inland lakes—isn't going to be simply a matter of getting the proper fit in your favorite colors.

There's going to be a lot more to it than that. You're going to have to be very, very careful in selecting your summer ensembles. But there's one ray of comfort in the situation—it also presents a wonderful opportunity to show yourself off at your best.

As is usual in conditions that spell problems for the fair sex, the men are at the bottom of it all. Here they've been going on for year after year, wearing quiet colors with which any hue that you cared to select for your frocks wouldn't clash at all.

"Your Own Fault."

Of course, as a matter of fact, it would be hard to find any color that would clash with the rather somber tones of black, grey and brown that have for years and years been considered the entire color range for men's clothes. Things have been easy for you. And, really, the new deal is your own fault.

You looked so completely entrancing on the southern beaches this past winter in your wonderfully and fearfully hued pajama costumes, that the men have developed a color complex and are themselves going into competition with the rainbow, at least as far as their summer wardrobes are concerned.

What you are going to see at the resorts this season will make your eyes stick out. How will you like your husband or the boy friend in a pinkish brown jacket—brightly colored, you understand; not a subdued tone—white flannel trousers striped in the same vivid hue, a light greenish shirt with a dark green necktie, white buck shoes tipped with brown and a panama hat with a yellow band?

Won't that be a sight to behold? Well, you're going to behold it and there's no maybe about the matter. In fact, the tailors of Boston are right now fairly swamped with orders for male summer flannels. And not one order in a hundred calls for the old familiar combination, so popular for decades at the big summer hotels, of a dark blue jacket with white or cream or somberly striped trousers.

Now, that costume was neat and dressy and we must admit that most of the men looked well in the combination. What was of more importance to the fair sex, was the fact that ranged beside their male escort in the big lobbies, just any color from the palest shade to the brightest red would look positively stunning.

Pick Hubby's Clothes.

But can you imagine yourself passing before the critical eyes of the rocking-chair brigade in a gown the hue of which was absolutely killed by the color of your escort's jacket? There's where your new problem comes in. And it's going to be a problem and don't you forget it.

Probably the best idea is for you to accompany your husband when he selects his summer wardrobe, just to make sure that the bright-hued garments which he will surely pick out—no man with a flair for color will be able to resist them—aren't those that will clash with your favorite shades.

Of course, there are several ways you may be able to turn the affair to your own advantage. There are two obvious courses. You may let your husband pick out his new clothes, look them over and then fare forth and select for yourself garments in shades that will make his look like something out of the rag bag. Or, if you don't think that that would be nice, pick out colors that will blend and harmonize with his.

On the other hand, why not go ahead and pick out your ensembles and then go along with him while he selects his and make sure that he gets shades that will harmonize or enhance your own? Then there's still another system that might be used, especially if the working half of the family is rather tight in the matter of your clothes allowance.

This system might be likened to the old adage of the prize ring—if the intrusion of the squared circle may be pardoned in an article designed especially for the fair sex—of getting in the first punch. Just go ahead and do your summer shopping early, buying duds that you like to the full limit of the allowance.

Then play a watchful waiting game until the tailor gets through with hubby. It's all right to throw out a hint or two about how lovely you think the new pastel shades are for men's summer clothes. That won't hurt a bit and it may help. However, it's perfectly all right just to leave the matter to the tailor for the clothiers of men are strong for the new colors.

Soon hubby's new clothes arrive and he dons them to give you a treat. Probably he has fallen in love with this one described by Victor J. VanNeste, "Boston's best dressed man," who gives the merchant tailors a lot of ideas.

This ensemble for males is built around bright green jacket with red stripes running both up and down and around to form a bewitching plaid—by the way, plaids and check

Men are going to be so colorful in their cl

orial Riot This Summer With Colorful Glad Rags

Glorious enough, eh? Well, that isn't half the story. The trousers are of yellow cloth—yellow, mind you, real yellow, not simply light tan or any thing like that. With this striking suit is worn a light blue cheviot shirt with a white collar and a cravat in a bold pattern of blue, yellow and red. The shoes are brown and white with buckles instead of laces. The ensemble is topped off by a Panama hat with a band of one of the colors displayed in the tie.

Green Dinner Jacket.

Now, of course, any of these costumes are perfectly all right for either day or evening wear at any of the finest hotels, for formal attire has small place during the summer months. But there are men who simply can't feel right unless they dress for dinner and the evening. But this year he will break away from the somber black.

Undoubtedly, they'll all sit up and take notice when they see this dressy vacationer coming into the dining room attired in a bright green dinner jacket. For this ensemble, the usual black waistcoat and tie have been changed. In fact, the waistcoat has been discarded entirely and the entire expanse of a brilliant yellow shirt left to dazzle the on-lookers. The tie is a green and white bow and the collar, of course, is winged. The trousers are of plain white or cream flannel and the shoes either black or tan and white.

"These new costumes for men," said Mr. Van Neste, "may at first appear as a rather sensational departure from the clothing we have formerly seen on men in this section. But when you see them made up and on the man for whom they were designed they appear quite right and proper. One of Boston's best dressed gentlemen—one who wouldn't for the world appear overdressed or out of place anywhere—has ordered an ensemble that combines a yellow flannel jacket with trousers of white striped in the same color.

"The slender man of dark complexion or the grey-haired man who has retained his figure may wear just about any of the new colors. But the red-haired man must be careful. For instance, he wouldn't look well in a jacket of the pinkish brown hue that is so popular this season. And the male who is very light of hair and complexion should not select the very light colors for his jackets."

"How is the short, stout man going to look in these bright colored clothes?" asked the reporter.

"Perfectly all right," Mr. Van Neste assured him. "A short man can wear the same colors that the tall slender man affects. It is all a matter of the way the clothes are cut. We never really fit a stout man, we drape him. By the way, that's a suggestion that portly women might do well to follow. If they will learn that they look much more slender in draped clothes than in those that fit them snugly, they'll appear to much greater advantage.

"Of course, the men won't wear pajamas outside of their rooms, but they should have in their wardrobes at least one suit of the new Shantung silk suits. These suits are as light and cool as the flimsiest pajama and yet have the quality of holding their lines and looking neat under almost any conditions. So, you see, that both in color and in comfort the men will be on equal terms with the women this summer.

"The flair for colors in vacation wear is being reflected in the new suitings for business wear. The shades are much lighter and plaids and wide stripes will be worn a great deal. Really, the tailors welcome the new colors; it gives them a chance to display real artistry."

"How about shorts?" queried the reporter. "Shorts will undoubtedly be worn in some sports such as tennis, but no one who is anybody will wear them elsewhere," pronounced Mr. Van Neste, and that was that.

this summer that the women will have to be very careful in choosing their own gowns.

are distinctly au fait for men this year. The trousers of this costume are of pinkish brown, shoes are tipped in brown and the socks present the same checks as the jacket. The haberdashery which goes with this costume is just as lovely as the suit itself. The shirt is of light tan with red stripes running around, with collar to match, and the tie is of bright yellow. Top that off with a Panama hat with band of a harmonizing hue.

Now, according to the main chance system, whether your husband selects that particular costume or not, in fact, no matter what ensemble he falls for, as soon as he dons it for your approval, it is your cue to stage a collapse. As soon as he wishes to know what-ever in the world is the matter assure him that the suit is a beauty and a real tribute to his artistry and that of his tailor, but that your new clothes simply won't go with it; the colors will clash and both of you will look like perfect frights.

New Clothes for You.

Of course, there never was a man yet who considered himself well enough versed in color schemes in attire to disagree with your verdict. So there's nothing in the world for him to do save come through with an entire new outfit for you, a state of affairs that surely no woman can object to in the least.

If you ladies don't think by this time, from the descriptions of male costumes for this coming summer, that you are going to have a lot of competition in making the rainbow look like an also ran, consider this one. It has a double-breasted jacket in a sort of purplish blue shade—not subdued but rich and striking. It is fitted with brass buttons and has four patch pockets and side vents.

goats. Stupid beasts—goats! They know nothing of music!" He swept a hand about the hujra. "We here are better judges. Come! Sing us a misra—a misra of love—a misra to fox red hair and silver gray eyes. For—" he bowed to Turkan Katoom—"If the gossip be true . . ."

"I don't know how to rhyme—nor how to swell and trill the sounds."

"It is easily learned. Shall I teach you—some day?" asked Yar Khan.

"Yes!" eagerly. "When will you?"

"Tomorrow at sunrise. Meet me in the Tukkrum hills, beside the gnarled peach, west of the little brook. And the songs I cannot teach you, the eagles will—and the 'ivy, gray foxes."

He walked away; and Turkan Katoom turned to Dost Murad.

"Do not go with him!" she begged.

"Why not, heart of my heart?"

"His path leads away from the day's proper work."

"There may be laughter in his path."

"And there may be tears."

"Laughter is rich."

"Plain contentment is richer. Please—"

she pleaded—"do not go with him. There is the sowing to be done . . ."

"I have finished my sowing."

"The garden to be weeded," she continued feverishly, "and the cattle to . . ."

"Pah! Am I forever slave to nine long horns? Let them graze by themselves for the span of a morning!"

"But," she whispered in a bleak agony of foreboding, "you must save—for our wedding—the marriage portion . . ."

"I shall show you a quick way to earn it," interrupted a deep voice, as Yar Khan's shadow fell between them as with the cutting of a sword. "Seven weeks from today, on the first Friday of the month of Hassan-Hussain, will be a great gathering in the hujra of the Red Village—and a thousand rupees to him who sings the sweetest misra." He glanced at Turkan Katoom, saying: "My grief—that I was never the one to win a woman's heart with the arts of my mouth nor of my eyes. I shall teach you, Dost Murad. And you will win the prize."

"Hail!" exclaimed the other. "Is this Tartar not a good friend, Turkan Katoom?"

So tomorrow came; and the herders on the road on the Tukkrum slopes heard a fine, quaint blending of two voices rolling down and, later on, saw two men climbing the higher peaks.

And the next day a peasant looking for stray goats, came upon Dost Murad and Yar Khan a spear's throw away from the ruined castle where, centuries earlier, the Ghazni sultans had ruled in pomp of silver and crimson. Storm tossed, crumbling.

About it the land seemed darkly brooding, blind to sunsets, deaf to the winds; and there, in the face of a precipice that gave upon the valley, Yar Khan one day had found a great cave that was unknown to the tribesmen. Snug and safe and secret, with cool water dripping from its roof into a hollow, it had been formerly a shelter for northern raiders when the peasants had turned on them in the strength and hardihood of despair and had driven them away. A huge fire might blaze at night in the stony heart of it; a steer roasted whole might sizzle on a spit; the roar of songs might shake its granite bowels—but the world outside would never guess.

Here Yar Khan spent many a night. For, as he said to himself:

"It is in such a place that a man may sleep soundly—and no worse than himself for company."

Nor did he ever speak about it to a soul, not even to Dost Murad, though today the two were friends closer than brothers; always together, hunting, trapping, fishing; strolling from village to village, from hujra to hujra, singing ballads and misras—until there were some who said that the pupil was beginning to be better than the master.

"And he does not even grudge me the glory of my singing," said Dost Murad one day as he met Turkan Katoom. "Is he not the best friend in the world?"

She stared at him. He was an amazing figure in savage, drenched garments, an eagle's wing boldly in his fur cap, a crooked dagger flat against the brawn of his bare arm—a man of the wilderness, no longer a man of the orderly fields.

"The best friend in the world?" she echoed bitterly.

"Yes!"

"And yesterday when you were hunting—so your mother told me, and her eyes were sore with weeping—the red cow fell down a ravine and broke her neck. And there—by Allah and by Allah—went part of our marriage portion to feed the kites and the wolves!"

He laughed.

"Let them fill their shriveled bellies! Why—wait till the great hujra of the month of Hassan-Hussain, and I shall buy you the pick and pride of all the cows in the land when I win the prize—as I shall. And I shall buy you the handsomest shawl to be had in all the bazaars of Bokhara and such a necklace of green stones and blue stones as would make the Hindi queen herself pale with envy. Hail—but you will be prettier even than you are now!"

"I would rather have you see me the ugliest witch in the valley—and taste a spice of joy when you are with me."

"I do, O my heart! I love you!"—and, as he spoke the words, he glanced over his shoulder to where Yar Khan stood waiting with a look as if to say he would not be long.

"I do not believe you," she replied. "You would not stay away from me—day after day—if you did."

"What?" His voice slurred with faint impatience. "Are you jealous of him? It is not he has looks like russet snakes nor eyes like a memory of stars!"

"And even that compliment," she exclaimed cuttingly, "you learned from him. It sounds like the misras he sings—to the trees, the birds, the rocks—belike to his own mixed, choked desires. For there is not a woman in all the villages to find pleasure in the Tartar's company!"

She walked away.

She did not notice that Yar Khan had overheard her last words; did not read the expression on his face—a queer mingling of love and hate, of grief and triumph, of candor and cunning.

So spring died; and early summer brushed into the valley on quivering, gauzy pinions, gliding the barley fields, hovering birdlike over the thatched roofs, dropping liquid silver across the hard toil of the fields. And still Dost Murad followed the Tartar along the wilderness road until one day, not long before the great hujra of the month Hassan-Hussain, Turkan Katoom conquered her pride and spoke of her heart's woe to the man she hated most:

"Why come between me and my love, Yar Khan?"

"Is it my fault," he smiled, "that Dost Murad prefers the road of my feet to the road of yours?"

"You showed him your road!"

"He was keen to take it. Do not blame me. Blame yourself."

"Myself?"

"Yes. Because you are not strong enough to hold him."

She stared at him out of her cold, gray eyes.

"Happy your mother that her bones are below the sod!" she cried. "There is less worth in you than there are hairs in the beard of the beardless!"

"Maybe!" he laughed. "But I am free! There is no yoke about my neck—no whip to bend my back to the toil of the brown clay!"

"Wah! Is there another animal suited to a donkey's nose? I despise you. So do all the women. There will never be lips to whisper to you of love!"

"And still I am stronger than you. Still I hold what you desire."

"What?"

"Dost Murad!" And, with a hawk's gleam in his narrow eyes, "Perhaps some day you will be begging me for a kiss of my mouth—that I may help you get back a little, little kiss of Dost Murad's mouth!"

Then she struck him across the face with her hard fist; and she went to Dost Murad's mother and lamented her fate.

"Allahee! Allahoo!" crooned the old woman. "It is thus the world is, my small dove. For sin was created before virtue—and tears before laughter—and hate before love. . . ."

Early the following morning came the drums.

It was one of those days that are often in our northern lands at the peak of summer; with a heavy opaque mist, just before sunup, oozing from the bloated skies, lying thickly upon the labored, sweating fields, clothing everything in a sodden, gray blanket, blending on the higher hills to a dark, purplish drab that might hold the yellow heart of thunder.

Blind seemed the world. Deaf.

And then, suddenly, the drums droning up, slashing through—banging! banging! banging!—muffled, nasal, sardonic, cruel . . .

Tartar drums!

There had been, these last few weeks, occasional news brought by caravanmen of bloody war in the west. Christians were killing Christians, it was said.

Allah! What did the tribesmen care? They were of the Moslems. And the others? Infidels all—God's curse on them and their fathers, fathers of pigs! Let them strangle each other, and let Shaitan feed upon the corpses!

Then—over night it seemed—catastrophe came in the north. The army of the Russians was beaten. The Ak-Pardishah, the white czar, was deposed. The revolution was no longer a dream of frightened, spineless visionaries, but a red fact. It rolled on from Moscow, north, west—and east and south into Central Asia. It rushed across towns and villages, across fields and steppes, like a sheet of smoldering fire. It thundered with the hate and hope of all that motley Slav-Tartar world and killed the hope of it with the hate of it.

For it brought liberty. But it also loosened all the shackles of restraint. It crushed the old order of things, but without building a new. So here, on the Afghan border, with no Cossacks to stem them, were once more the old raids, and there droned into the Valley of the Wealth of Waters—banging! banging!—half forgotten, shudderingly remembered, the beat of Tartar war drums, loaded with thoughts of death and torture and rapine.

The villagers rushed from their houses. They stopped, stricken, in a helpless cluster about their chiefs and priests. They strained their ears for the ever-nearing thump of the drums, the echo of hoofs, the clash of blades.

The mist was still about the land. But here and there, through its clogging ooze, rose vague, ghostly forms of rider and horse; and out of the crackle and roar, a single shout peaked clear—a Tartar war cry, savage, guttural:

Hurr! hurr!—kill! kill!

Mumbled prayers rose:

"O Allah . . ."

"O Thou all-merciful . . ."

"O King of the Day of Judgment . . ."

A woman broke into terrible, hysterical laughter. A child cried. And the phantom riders galloped free: Yellow faces, wolfish, grim. Crimson banners. A flash of lance points and sword blades and metal bossed arm shields. War cries, like the responses in some satanic litany.

"Hurr! hurr!—kill! kill!"

The villagers had no time to make a stand and fight no chance to escape. Voices bellowed. Voices implored. Steel struck home. Bodies fell, were trampled, crushed. A torch was tossed up to a thatched roof. Flames—fire—licking with pink and orange tongues—spreading with a hissing and popping.

Came death to the Valley of the Wealth of Waters.

Death to Turkan Katoom's father and brothers slaughtered by her side . . . the swish of a battle ax which missed her by the width of a hair.

She dropped as one dead; saw the Tartar butchers leap out of the house and on to the next; felt—through the wrack and ruin, the mist, the flames, the gray smoke wreaths—strong hands touching hers, gripping hers, jerking her up; and heard Yar Khan's sibilant whisper:

"Come . . . the castle of the Ghazni sultans . . . I know a cave there . . ."

And a thinner voice, Dost Murad's:

"Come, O my heart . . ."

Her knees tottered. Her senses reeled. But muscular arms picked her up; and she had a vague impression of broad, heaving shoulders, of feet running swiftly beneath her—up—up . . . while farther and farther receded the cries of triumph and death.

When finally she regained consciousness and opened her eyes, she saw that she was flung like a bag across Yar Khan's broad back, with one of his hands curving up and holding her. A few paces in the rear ran Dost Murad. His breath came in short, staccato bursts.

They put her down. She raced between them—faster and faster, higher and higher to the crest of the northern hills.

In the valley the mist still coiled, shot with scarlet flames.

"If it holds, we are safe," said Yar Khan. He stopped. He listened tensely. There was that roaring wave of sound which men call silence; then very faintly, a patter of feet, a clash of steel. "You hear?" he asked.

"They saw us?"

"I do not think so. But doubtless they will scour the hills and woods for stray cattle . . ."

There was a strong, twisting puff of wind. "Come! Come!" Dost Murad. "The mist is tearing!"

They increased their speed. They reached the castle of the Ghazni sultans and ran to the rim of the rocky precipice that faced the valley. The wind grew. The upper layers of mist rolled off like a blanket.

"Here is the place," said Yar Khan. He led them of the cave, bent, drew a leather rope from under a granite slab and tied it to a gnarled oak. "Wood is down there and water," he added, "and the rope to slide down on, and to swing up with a hitch and catch this tree—in a day or two—when the Tartars will have had their fill of killing and looting and will leave the valley." And, with something like irony, to Turkan Katoom: "There will still be the proper fields waiting for the toiling of your lord's brawn—and belike a brace of sheep bleating somewhere . . ."

He turned to Dost Murad:

"You go first. Make the rope fast below."

Hand over hand the length of knotted, tough rawhide swinging crazily, perilously. Dost Murad went over the side. A few moments later his voice drifted up from the mouth of the cave, telling them he had secured the rope.

Turkan Katoom stared at Yar Khan. "You saved my life—" she murmured—"and the life of the man I love. And I—I insulted you—I struck you . . ."

"And you mocked the road of my feet! You said there would never be lips to whisper to me of love!"

"Yes—yes . . . her words were choked. "Then—will you kiss me—in friendship . . .?"

She pressed her mouth to his. He held her close.

"Allah!" he said exultingly. "You with the morning on your forehead and the stars in your eyes . . ."

He slurred; was silent. His sharp ears had caught what hers had not; the crackle of steel, guttural voices brushing up the trail.

"Down with you!" he spoke rapidly. "But—what about yourself . . .?"

"I shall come last! No fear, little queen! I shall trill a fine, sweet misra at your wedding!"

She swung herself across the precipice. He waited until he heard that she had reached the cave.

The mist had cleared completely. The raiders were very near. There was time enough for him to follow. Yes. But the Tartars would come up, would find the rope, would guess . . . and then . . . ?

Or he might cut the rope from below. But there was no other way to leave the cave. It would be a grave, with the rope missing.

There was only one thing to do. He did it. He slashed the rope with his dagger close to the tree. He threw the severed knots down the precipice so that no sign remained. Then he turned toward the trail.

"Allah! Allah!" he said to himself with a deep, throbbing melancholy, an infinite pity for his own fate. "But there is the dark, dark night in me—like a man's heart craving for the door of escape . . ."

Just then he saw shaggy fur caps on the slope—saw the glint of weapons—saw the raiders climb up the trail. He stood there, sharply outlined against the light, pigeon blue sky.

"My sorrow," he thought as he advanced toward them, "that Tartars must kill Yar Khan! Hail—but I follow the road of my feet!"

And he went down beneath the crimson wind of the scimitars.

HIGH LIGHTS OF HISTORY

By J. CARROLL MANSFIELD

THE AMERICAN CLIPPER WHOSE ACHIEVEMENTS IN THE FIFTIES ADDED A GLORIOUS CHAPTER TO THE HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES MERCHANT MARINE, WAS THE ACME OF SAILING SHIP CONSTRUCTION.

A CLIPPER UNDER FULL SAIL WAS A BEAUTIFUL AND INSPIRING SIGHT.

THE DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTICS OF THE CLIPPER WERE HER HULL — ITS GREATEST WIDTH AMIDSHIPS, A NARROW STERN AND A SHARP CONCAVE PROW — AND HER ENORMOUS SPREAD OF SAIL.

The Reign of the American Clipper

AFTER RECOVERING FROM THE EFFECTS OF THE WAR OF 1812, AMERICA BECAME A KEEN COMMERCIAL COMPETITOR OF GREAT BRITAIN, PARTICULARLY IN THE FAR EASTERN TRADE. FAST PACKET LINES SAILING DIRECTLY TO PORTS IN THE ORIENT TOOK THE PLACE OF THE OLD-TIME RAMBLING TRADING CRUISERS. SPEED WAS VITALLY ESSENTIAL IN THIS NEW COMMERCE, AND THE AMERICAN CLIPPER SHIP WAS DESIGNED TO MEET THIS REQUIREMENT.

JOHN GRIFFITHS OF NEW YORK DESIGNED THE FIRST CLIPPER IN 1841, AFTER STUDYING THE SHAPES OF VARIOUS FISHES TO DETERMINE THE LINES FOR A SHIP'S HULL THAT WOULD OFFER LEAST RESISTANCE TO THE WATER.

OLD SAILORS RIDICULED GRIFFITHS FOR HIS "NEW-FANGLED" IDEAS, BUT HIS FIRST CLIPPER, THE "RAINBOW," LAUNCHED IN 1845 WAS AN IMMEDIATE SUCCESS.

(Copyright 1930 by J. Carroll Mansfield)

ON HER FIRST VOYAGE TO CHINA THE "RAINBOW" MADE THE ROUND TRIP IN HALF THE TIME FORMERLY REQUIRED AND EARNED TWICE HER ORIGINAL COST. GRIFFITHS INSTANTLY LEAPED INTO FAME.

GRIFFITHS' SECOND CLIPPER, THE "SEA WITCH," THRILLED THE MARITIME WORLD BY SAILING FROM CHINA TO NEW YORK IN 73 DAYS. AMERICAN SHIPBUILDERS HASTENED TO BUILD CLIPPERS.

IN THE HECTIC DAYS OF THE CALIFORNIA GOLD RUSH THOUSANDS OF EASTERN FORTUNE HUNTERS, IN HASTE TO REACH THE GOLD FIELDS, CLAMORED FOR PASSAGE TO SAN FRANCISCO ON THE FAST CLIPPERS.

THE FAMOUS "FLYING CLOUD," GREATEST OF ALL CLIPPERS, RACED FROM NEW YORK, AROUND CAPE HORN, TO SAN FRANCISCO (14,000 MILES) IN 89 DAYS, AN UNBEATEN RECORD, ON HER MAIDEN VOYAGE.

THE AMERICAN PUBLIC FOLLOWED THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE CLIPPERS WITH INTEREST AND PRIDE. THE MAKING OF EACH NEW SPEED RECORD BECAME AN EVENT OF NATIONAL IMPORTANCE.

QUITE AS MUCH CREDIT FOR THESE WONDERFUL EXPLOITS WAS DUE THE SUPERIOR SEAMANSHIP AND AUDACIOUS COURAGE OF THE AMERICAN SKIPPERS AS THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE SHIPS THEMSELVES.

FOR A DECADE, 1850-1860, THE YANKEE CLIPPER GOT THE CREAM OF THE WORLD'S CARRYING TRADE, BEARING THE BULK OF AMERICAN SEA COMMERCE AND A LARGE PART OF THAT OF FOREIGN COUNTRIES AS WELL.

MANY ENGLISH MERCHANTS ENGAGED IN THE INDIA AND CHINA TRADE PREFERRED TO SHIP THEIR GOODS IN AMERICAN CLIPPERS, AND FOR AWHILE THE SUPREMACY OF THE BRITISH MERCHANT MARINE WAS SERIOUSLY MENACED.

THEN CAME THE CIVIL WAR, CRIPPLING AMERICAN COMMERCE. SHORTLY AFTERWARD IRON STEAMERS BECAME POPULAR, AND THE GRACEFUL CLIPPERS BEGAN DISAPPEARING FROM THE HIGH SEAS. — TO BE CONTINUED.

The House On Caroline Street

HEARING Caroline stop rustling suddenly the pages of the letter Margaret Milne asked lightly, "What's the news from David?"

And Caroline Durant said slowly, "He wants me to divorce him."

There was a long quiet in the big Spanish room after that, or so it seemed to Caroline.

"I'm really—I'm really not very much surprised," she felt herself saying. "It has been six months since his last novel was finished and in all this time he hasn't had the glimmer of an idea for another one. It's the first time that that has ever happened to him and he's been dreadfully disturbed. That's why he went on this yachting trip with the Loring. He thought the change—and at the last minute Eleanor Loring decided to join them—so of course—that is, I expect she—"

It was the next day, when Caroline had had all night to understand fully and clearly that David had asked her to divorce him, that Margaret had said suddenly, "You know perfectly well, Caroline, that David is always getting emotions, and getting over them. I wouldn't pay any attention to it."

They were sitting in the patio. Caroline's long hands were quiet together in her gray lap and her feet in gray suede were quiet together on the floor.

"I hope you won't be harsh with David," she said to Margaret simply, ignoring the fact that Margaret's eyes seemed to redden when she looked at her. "He—there are very few men like him. The English reviews of his last book said there were very few American novelists of his caliber."

"And very few wives like you, my dear," Margaret said to her impulsively. "You've been perfect for him. You've subordinated everything to him. You've been the most perfect listener, the most perfect—why, I can't imagine his getting along without you for a moment. He has simply thought up this idea of a man of his age needing to be free."

"No," said Caroline slowly. "I rather think Eleanor Loring thought that up."

Margaret stopped suddenly. She and Caroline both thought vividly about Eleanor Loring. She was young, magnetically young, and she was all satin brown skin and scarlet imperious lips and young blue eyes. She moved like a manner in the wind and men's heads followed her like weathercocks. Caroline and Margaret remembered her unconcealed excitement at meeting David in New York four months ago. She had worn scarlet chiffon and clung to David, dancing with him. Now she was on Brother Bill's yacht, looking at David.

Presently Caroline rose slowly, went in, fetched her hat, and came out wearing it.

"I'm going away," Caroline said mildly. "Tell David when he lands that I said he must do as he thinks best. I—I have to go away."

"But Caroline, darling, not right away, like this? You can't."

"I'm taking our small car and just a bag. I've packed my trunk, but I shan't want it. And thank you, thank you deeply, for everything."

She crossed the sun gold and green of the patio quickly, with Margaret's astonished exclamation in her ears. It was dreadfully rude of her to go like this and yet she couldn't do anything else. The car started easily and she got away before any one could come out to the gate.

She had some instinct for the southward which drew her, eyes steadily on the road. Beneath her overwhelming preoccupation she woke slowly to a feeling of guilt about Margaret. Because at the last she had not been quite honest with her, who saw her going away, a pale and heartbroken woman. How could she possibly have explained to David's friends that she was leaving hastily out of the most overwhelming surge of relief?

The point was, even she could not keep up perfection always. She thought that and grinned sardonically, pushing at the gas. It was Margaret's remark about her having given up everything for David that had been the last straw. Everybody always thought that. The general implication that she had given up even individuality for him. Well, she thought honestly now, she had. Maybe she had had no particular individuality to give. And yet somehow she had always secretly felt that she might have one somewhere. Just to think that she would not have to listen any more to David telling her, every night, the whole gamut of his emotions for that day. Caroline had always wondered what it would feel like to feel so acutely all the time.

Of course she had felt this. David's letter had struck her numb at first. Because, after all, she remembered vaguely there had been a time when David had been young and dashing and she had been in love with him. She supposed he was a sort of habit of hers, like a hand or a shoulder. But now she had begun to get this extraordinary sense of escape. It was so extraordinary that she had felt that if she had waited to see him it would have vanished. Maybe her heart would be really broken, then. She could not afford to wait. This was too wonderful. And yet she knew perfectly well this was horrid of her. David would feel he had every right to her understanding and her sympathy. He would expect to talk to her about it for hours. And then he would expect her to arrange everything nicely for him, with her usual quiet efficiency.

That night she woke in her hotel room from the dead of sleep and yawned and about that. If she were to have a new self, she thought at last, drifting off to sleep, she would choose to be the mistress of that house—free minded and serene.

The pungent smell of early Cuban coffee was on the street in the morning sunlight when she went up the path of the house on Caroline street with the key in her hand. The agent had let her go in alone. She turned the key in the lock and went in.

It was just as she had imagined—high and shadowy and still. She stepped down the long hall that ran straight through the house, opened the door on the back gallery, and felt the wind move through familiarly once more. The wall opposite the staircase which turned its back to the street door was all one enormous folding door, stretched luxuriantly. A gulf of silky air streamed across her from the wide window squares of starry dark, and there was a queer old bell tonking. This was Key West and she was going to stay here. Life could begin again.

For three days she moved quietly about her room and about the city as if waiting for something. She slept lightly and woke often to stare out at the sea beyond the narrow streets, and the rooftops. The sea was on all sides. A vigor was growing in her, a keen freshening of interest in her surroundings and in herself. Whatever she was waiting for might happen at any minute.

It was then that she came upon the house on Caroline street. She had noticed the street name first, and, pleasantly amused, followed it, strolling leisurely down the white pavement laced by the long late shadows of the trees. At the corner she looked across at the house.

It seemed to her instantly that it was hers. It stood a little back from the street, high and silvery gray, and gracious, with the two great galleries that swept about its shuttered windows, where the great tree shadows moved in silence. Its front door was a massive simplicity. There would be an identity for her there.

At the hotel she found the clerk knew all about the house. It was for sale, unfurnished. There was a man she could see about it in the morning. She slept only three hours that night after excited planning. Lucy Burnell in New York would send her things to furnish it properly. There was her own banker in Connecticut on whom she could depend to keep her secret. There was a bond or two she could sell. She would have enough to live on without another cent from David. It was the first time she had definitely thought high, narrow white panels which gave into the huge living room. She stood in the middle of that and sighed contentedly in the dim space.

The dining room was huge and empty on the other side of the hall, with another room, a library, perhaps, nearer the front door. Beyond that again was a great open breezeway, latticed, with latticed pantries, and beyond that again, so that the heat would never affect the house, the kitchen with raised brick platforms where ancient stoves had stood, and sheds multiplying themselves beyond that. All about everything went the wide gallery with its pillars. Upstairs she turned as if instinctively to her own room, on the corner to the right, almost as high as the high ceilinged rooms below, with as many windows looking out to the upper gallery, and behind it a smaller room for a spacious dressing room and bath.

She stood a long time in the corner of the upper gallery, looking down on the hot, bright streets from her high shadows, thinking how it must have been when the house was built. Those were high days then, with gold and goods pouring into Key West through the salvage courts, when the harbor was etched with tall masts of ships from Salem and London and St. Pierre and Havana and Panama. All the unnoticed things she had ever heard about Key West came flooding back to her now, a tradition of its own. It was refreshing to her now to remember that life had gone on here richly, full-bodied, and adventurous with the sun.

She went on planning with delight. She wanted heavy plain damask, satiny with use, and clear glasses, and the sea air always moving among silvery cool colors, and a brown gentle face or two in her kitchens, soft voiced in her halls. When she went out again into the sunlight she locked the door with a firm, gay hand and walked to the street with a firm, gay step. She wired Lucy Burnell immediately and her banker, and hurried to see the agent. There would have to be innumerable repairs. Poor, dear David, she thought once, signing papers by her maiden name, as Mrs. Caroline Kenyon, which might or might not be legal. He would be shocked if he could see her so lighthearted.

She discovered that curious creative thrill that comes to almost every woman in poring over samples and holding them against window frames, in watching, in an alert haze of satisfaction, men's knowing hands spreading paint creamy smooth over fine sandpapered wood, in seeing locks mended, broken glass repaired, old carpets taken up and thrown away, electric wiring laid behind panels, and everything from front steps to cupola scrubbed and scrubbed and scrubbed.

She rejoiced daily in new discoveries, the curious charming hinges of the old doors, the patterns of old bolts, the fineness and strength of old hand hewn beams, the easy tread of ancient stairs. Occasionally she thought of David. He must be ashore by now, she was aware. He would have been having all the proper emotions at knowing that she had left him free. She was pretty certain that he would be outraged at her abruptness. But he would have Eleanor Loring to talk to. She supposed sometime she would have to communicate with him, after it had been time enough for a divorce.

But after the wall paper was up in the long living room, faint silvery gray and green old landscape paper that Lucy Burnell had sent her, she thought of him only at lengthening intervals. Even before her own old furniture was in place the room was a delight to her, it was so cool, so reserved, so delicately stately. It was not David's sort of thing at all. The tiny clinkings of the crystal chandelier were a little scale of pleasure in her mind. This was entirely hers.

The day came surprisingly soon when she moved into her house, walking about her own room quietly, putting away shoes and hats with a sense of great restful breaths. Deep in the kitchens she could hear the murmur of old Charlotte and her daughter, who were going to take care of her. She stood in the doorway of the living room sighing with content. The curtains were the color of tea roses, and the heavy plain furniture stood like massed shadows in the quiet, clear light. She moved about touching a book in the shelves, a key of her mother's old square piano, a camellia in a thin glass. When she turned she saw her own figure down the room in a great mirror. Curious, she went nearer, staring with surprise at the woman she had become. That woman was tall, with a skin richly brown with sun, carrying her head high and smiling a little softly with a mouth that might once have been only wistful. Her face was even a little strange to her; there was so much vivid life in it, so much vigor and delight. Her eyes were wide open, darkly brilliant, with a look of frank and undefended happiness. What would David think of her now, she wondered, and was startled at having thought of him.

She ate her lunch serenely, savoring the broiled pompano with clear green slices of Persian lime and the smooth Spanish bread. Her eyes followed with satisfaction the soft coming and going of Charlotte's daughter serving her. The girl was the color of ripe sickle pears. She would dress her in carnelian colored uniforms, with little ecru net aprons, and a turban of tomato red silk. Back in her own room for a nap after lunch, she lay down with the quiet of the house full in her veins. The street outside was lazy hushes. She did hope, just dozing off, that Eleanor Loring would recognize the moment when David would need to be let alone to work. If he could not work when he needed to he got so difficult and high strung.

People began dropping in to call. They seemed to her unique and charming people, whom she was grateful to for coming. There was the little librarian woman, with soft clever eyes and surprisingly deft conversation about books, and the Episcopal minister and his wife, and also several Cuban wives of men with whom she had done business, shy and plump and charmingly mannered. Presently there was a brisk, smartly turned out Navy wife or two, whom for some odd reason she seemed to impress, with their interest in bridge and their crisp talk of strange places, like well-groomed birds of passage. Caroline smiled delightedly at all of them, feeling utterly at home in her new dresses, soft silvery flowing things, that rustled behind her on the stairs as she descended to her guests. She did her dark hair in a new way, high on her head, and found some heavy old coral earrings and touched her lips with rouge to the same color.

She was hardly aware of how it came about that there came to be so many men among the late groups on her long sofas, or lingering on the gallery outside the French doors. She supposed at first it was because their wives made them come. It was tremendously pleasant having them, and starched navy white and a gleam of a gold insignia gave such an air. But it was not until Peter Benson had been coming for weeks, to play the piano among the ravaged coffee trays, that she realized suddenly that not all of them were married. Peter wasn't, of course, silly to imagine Peter married, or to think of him by any other name than Peter, although really, they told her, he was one of the young generation of brilliant navy doctors. Somebody had brought him, probably Mrs. Venno, the commandant's wife. Lieutenant Barry came with him often, and Archer Collins, the town's bachelor lawyer. But Peter came more often than any.

She ventured, breathless as a bride, to give little dinners in her shadowy dining room for Captain and Mrs. Venno and Peter, or the Mansons and the Episcopal minister and his wife, and Peter. Peter stopped by sometimes in the mornings, to bring her an invitation to tea at the navy yard or a book or a dozen mangoes and she would lean from the upper gallery and laugh down at his banter. He had a trick of laughing up at her, with his eyes black and brooding. Peter left piles of music over her piano, and insisted that it be repaired and tuned, and brought in stray musicians, a baritone or a violinist, for unimaginably lovely evenings, with the neighbors drifting in. Peter gave her bitter tones when she had a cold and scolded her for being too much absorbed in housekeeping. He organized navy picnics and fishing trips far out on the polished surface of the sea toward Cuba, and insisted that Caroline learn to swim. Her days were filled with Peter, somehow.

He had the most astonishing way of talking to her. There was the afternoon when he had stopped playing suddenly and stalked across to the tea tray, where she sat for a moment alone, bent over and said, "Your eyes are the youngest things in the world except sunrises." There was the evening when they had walked home through the jet and moonlit shadows of the navy yard and he had said, "Your silences are like a crown about your lovely head." She had peered a long time into her mirror after that. Could it really be possible that she had a lovely head? Peter had said, "After you have spoken, your words are beautiful a long time."

It was perfectly absurd, of course, Caroline told herself. It was the influence of the tropics, or something. And yet it was delicious.

Lieutenant Barry proposed to her. That was the first real shock she had. And the very next afternoon Archer Collins asked her to marry him. She could not have been more amazed, she told herself, cooling her hot cheeks afterward, if David himself had suddenly appeared to fall at her feet. It was simply incredible. Lieutenant Barry had stammered and flushed, poor boy, just as if he had really meant it. And she was old enough to be his aunt, she had told him, motherly and understanding and tolerant. That would have been enough without Archer Collins proposing the very next evening.

Neither Archer nor the lieutenant stopped coming to see her. They stood in corners with dignity, gazing at her, and passed cake with passionate good manners.

She sat one afternoon in the high brocade chair by the windows, thinking that it must be five months since she had arrived in Key West. This was May, with the airs from the sea bright hot at moontime under the blazing sun. It might have been five years. The Milnes, and Eleanor Loring, and David, all those hurrying, high keyed groups, must have been in the north long since. She leaned her dark head back tranquilly, half listening to Peter playing Bach at the other end of the room. No other way of life, she told herself, could be possible to her now. The light darkened suddenly and Peter changed to Chopin. It was going to rain.

The heavy tropic downpour crashed outside, turning the world all flowing dark green and silver, lashing whitely against the hastily shut windows. Caroline paced the room, elevated with it, her eyes toward the white swirl outside. She hardly noticed that Peter had stopped playing the piano. Presently the storm ceased abruptly and she threw open the windows to the dripping green light, feeling the cool drops along her bare arms.

When she turned back Peter was just behind her. He caught her in his arms in one long abrupt gesture and kissed her, kissed her mouth, her eyes, her cheeks, with a mature, deliberate force that kept her rigid, shocked, mute.

"I love you," he said to her harshly. "I love you." And let her go. She stood staring at him, her hands trembling. His young face was dark and his eyes brooded upon her. She was old enough to be his aunt, she insisted to herself. Yet this warm shiver—was this love? Was she going to fall in love with Peter, like a girl of twenty?

He turned and strode out of the room, out the front door. The fresh wind scattered all his music from the piano and she stared at the leaves, aghast. This was dreadful—she was a middle aged woman, perhaps still married.

She lay awake much of that night. It was extraordinary how that one event, which it was silly to take too seriously, changed the whole serene weather of her being. She went alternately not and cold, thinking of herself and Peter. It was absurd. It was dreadful. When she went down to breakfast the next morning, trying not to think of the circles under her eyes, Peter moved deliberately to the foot of the stairway, caught her again, and kissed her.

"Peter," she said, as soon as she could catch her breath, "you must stop this. You mustn't ever do this again. I can't."

"You love me, you know you do," he said defiantly and was gone again. He stayed away for two days. She could not imagine what had happened to her, or to him. Her serenity was shattered like a too fragile glass. In its place she was disturbed and moody, fighting off the preposterous idea that she could be in love with Peter, and yet restless with thinking about him, restless with expecting to look up and see him.

On the third night she dined at the Venno's in the navy yard and Peter was there. He stirred a kind of nervous electricity in her, that was not happiness so much as a feverish gaiety. He drove her home later and tried to kiss her in the shadows of her own doorway but she escaped him and was miserable for hours, regretting that he had let her escape. It was like having a high temperature, she told herself. This must not go on.

She moved out on the upper gallery, after she had gone upstairs, because she was not yet ready for sleep. There was wind between the treetops and the stars. She stood a moment in shadow, musing down at the street. David stood there before her house, staring up at her front door. The street light fell stark white upon his blown gray hair and upon the lines in his heavy face.

Her heart leaped and struck. She froze into immobility for fear any gesture would snatch his glance upward. It was David, here. He walked slowly up the path, glancing about him. She heard his footsteps on the porch. If she had not seen him at all, had had no idea he was within a hundred miles, she would have known that step and the way he rang the bell. She stayed as still as death, with her breath coming faster. Charlotte and her daughter were out somewhere. The house was empty but for her. But if they had been there, she would have whispered to them fiercely, from the stairs, not to go to the door.

Presently David went back down the path. On the sidewalk he stopped and looked again toward the house, with the jerk of his head that meant he was irritated and impatient.

When his footsteps had ceased to ring up the street she crept to bed and lay there, shivering with excitement, like a child. He would be back in the morning, of course. And what if Peter—heavens, what a whirl of emotions one could have, to be sure, with all the best intentions toward tranquillity.

In the morning she found a decidedly invigorating quality in the idea that David was in town. After all, nothing he could say could have any effect on her now. She had put on her newest dress, a faintly yellow organdy with tiny ruffles up the full skirt like a ghost of a crinoline and with faint yellow lace on her smooth brown shoulders. The corals in her ears were the color of her lips, and her eyes were brilliantly excited under her high piled cloudy hair. She did not feel in the least like Mrs. David Durant, whatever her legal status. Suppose she did marry Peter, she thought, with sudden audacity. It was not at all impossible. There was such a maturity about him. She should not imagine him marrying a mere girl. He required maturity, also. She could do wonders for his career. She really did not know exactly how much younger he was. She had had a curious instinct to avoid the knowledge.

The doorbell rang and she felt her heart sink, knowing it was David. After all, she thought, with a leap of defiant exultation, she was glad that David could see her like this, just once.

He stepped just within the doorway, looking at her, with his lips apart as if the sight of her had checked a torrent of words. He was bigger than she had remembered and his hair was shaggier and grayer. But he had lost a little weight and there was something else changed about his face, a vividness gone or a consciousness of added years.

"Well, David," she said composedly, moving toward him down the room, "how nice to see you."

"Caroline," he said, clutching her hand, "I—I can't believe that I have found you. You can't imagine what I've been through."

"Found me?" she said brightly, glowing at him. Really, it was nice to see him again, now that she could feel so firmly free. "You mean you've really been trying to find me? How funny. Do sit down, won't you?"

"Funny," he said, standing stock still and glaring at her. "Heavens, what an odd expression, Caroline. I tell you, I've suffered."

She sat down contentedly in a swirl of pale yellow and smiled gayly up into his eyes.

He said, "Ever since I arrived that day at the Milne's and found you had gone, heaven knows where, without a word to me, or an explanation I—I haven't known what to do. I would not have believed you would have done a thing like that to me."

Caroline laughed out loud, lightly, full up into his abstracted gaze. "David, you are marvelous," she said. "Do sit down. Have you forgotten completely that you had wanted a divorce?"

Sitting down, so that he no longer was multiplied in the long mirrors, and gazing at her with that astonished and awakened glance, he was suddenly a rather interesting and certainly a very stimulating guest.

"Surely you might have known I would want to talk things over, explain my position and my feelings to you, which were always of respect and affection. Surely you might have—"

She laughed out loud lightly again, from the brimming of her reassurance. "My dear, you're so funny," she said. "That's why it's so nice to see you again. And when are you going to get married?"

"Married?" His stare was a bit wild.

"Certainly, married."

"But—but did you divorce me?"

"I?" she said. "Why, no, David. Did you think I had? I had no grounds for divorce. Didn't I desert you?"

There was actually a dark brickish color sweeping up into his face. "But you couldn't imagine that I would divorce you?" he said. "Surely you knew I thought too much of you, of your reputation."

"Then we're still married?" she asked him, curiously. There was an acute touch of disappointment in her tone. She had taken so much for granted. And now that Peter—"Dear me, that's a nuisance," she said lightly.

David's face was dark red. "You're sorry?" he said stiffly. "But I used to think that you were devoted to—I supposed you had not forgotten. You're changed," he said abruptly. "I—you're very different, Caroline."

"But don't you think I'm nicer?" she said gayly and saw him go absolutely mute. Poor, dear David.

That was Peter, coming in the front door with his usual hail. She was surprised that she was not disturbed. Peter halted in the doorway—Peter, slim in his whites, dark headed, romantic. He was the most romantic figure she had ever known, she thought, smiling at him tranquilly.

"This is Dr. Benson, David," she said. After all, why not be matter-of-fact about it? "My husband, Peter. He is David Durant."

The men nodded awkwardly. Perhaps it was difficult for them, she thought. But how could she help it? "Mr. Durant just dropped in unexpectedly this morning," she said lightly. "Not sitting down, Peter? He has been—where have you been, David? How did you happen—"

David's eyes were on her still with that startled look. "I—I was in New York all spring," he said heavily. "I was trying to work. Then Bill Loring wired me from Palm Beach that he was cruising to South America. I—hadn't been able to write a word. We got in here yesterday. I saw you on the wharf. It was the most astonishing thing. I was just looking casually through the spy glass and you walked into it, from across the wharf." His face shaped itself heavily, as if it tired him. Peter stood perfectly still in the doorway, his face guarded. It was like a challenge, his guarded look. It was so utterly different from David's.

"You'd better stay to lunch, David." And yet how could she sit opposite him, reading so clearly every line of his face. "Peter's staying, of course," she said to him. It would be easier to have them both there.

David struggled to his feet. "No, they'll be expecting me on board. But I must talk to you, Caroline. I must."

Peter made a polite murmur of departure, which Caroline checked. "O, I doubt if there is anything much for us to say, David," she said firmly. "We can say goodbye just as well now, I think." She gave him her hand pleasantly and firmly. She wanted him to go away now, to go away quickly, with that bewildered, altered face. "I suppose Eleanor is with her brother on the yacht?" she said.

"Eleanor?" David said, and flushed slowly again. "Why, yes, she's aboard."

"Eleanor Loring?" Peter asked unexpectedly. "Why, I used to know her when she was a little girl in Newport. Bill Loring's kid sister? Terrible little tomboy. She here?"

"O—ah—yes," said David. "Used to know them, did you? You better come to tea. They'll be glad. She's been complaining she's bored with us already. And I'll come back this evening, Caroline. I—I'll have to talk to you. You must let me."

Poor, dear David. He was quite wretched. Caroline thought following him to the door. Well, it wouldn't hurt her to let him talk.

Peter sat moodily at the lunch table, playing with his fork. "I didn't know David Durant was your husband," he said.

"I forgot to tell you," she said lightly. His dark look stirred little throbbings in her heart. He was so young, beside David. He made life so young for her, so exciting. "Do you—do you really mind? We'd planned a divorce for so long." She flushed suddenly at that. How stupid of her. It was just as if she were throwing herself at Peter's head. She felt awkward and confused.

"He writes such stunning prose," Peter said, not meeting her eyes.

She glanced at him, thinking that she did not know him at all, perhaps she never would know him, his dark, inexplicable moods, his unexpectedness. "Poor, dear David," she said lightly.

When Peter was gone she realized that he had not kissed her. She wandered about the house uncertainly, feeling restless, feeling a little apprehension growing in her at seeing David again. It was ridiculous of David not to have gotten a divorce.

She said as much to him, sitting in the soft candlelight, in creamy white silk that left her shoulders bare and made her hair inky. "I can't imagine why you should have been so old-fashioned, David," she said with irritation, tapping her black lace fan impatiently on her slim, silken knee.

David sat on the long sofa, looking even more disturbed than he had in the daytime. His face was dark with sunburn over the whiteness of his dinner shirt. His heavy shoulders in the black coat slumped a little. Curiously, he did not answer her. "Tell me what you have done with yourself all these months, Caroline," he said simply, so simply that she stared at him.

"What I have been doing? Goodness, David, imagine your being interested. I've done very little, but I've enjoyed it. This house, reading, making new friends."

"You've been happy," he said with a kind of slow bewilderment. "And men have made love to you. And I haven't been able to do anything. I couldn't write, I couldn't—"

"I suppose that's from being in love with Eleanor," she said. "She's very lovely, David. She'll make a brilliant wife for you."

"Brilliant," he began and stopped. "But

Your Flower and Vegetable Garden

By W. Elbridge Freeborn

NOTHER garden club has started an educational garden here in Atlanta, and it bids fair to be one that will be the talk of the town. It is being planted at the present time. This garden is being planted by the Iris Garden Club and is located on Peachtree circle at LaFayette drive. Already they have planted more than five thousand German iris and in that number there are more than 200 varieties. Some of these varieties are the most choice ones, worth in some instances $25 per bulb. We hope that it will be as great a success as we believe that it will be, and wish the club the best of luck.

For those of you that haven't had the pleasure of seeing this garden it will be well worth while to drive out and take a look at it. Next spring it will be a riot of beauty.

We understand that the club's idea is not to confine itself to the growing of German iris but to grow the English, Japanese, Spanish and Dutch iris as well.

As the new flowers are introduced, we find ourselves with new loves and favorites. A new strain of gaillardia will make us forget many of our old friends of the garden and forsake them for this new attraction, but our true love remains with our old friends that, year after year, give us beauty and make our garden a spot that we cherish and that our friends come to and admire.

There isn't a better example of this characteristic than our old friend the German iris. It is so well known and generally loved that it is often times called "garden iris." Once I stopped to think of the reason that might account for the fact that the German iris is called garden iris. The only logical reason that occurred to me that it carried the name because of the fact that it is found in so many gardens. As a matter of fact "Better Homes and Gardens" recently made a survey of gardens over the entire country and found that the German iris was the most popular flower in the entire country. The highest compliment that can be paid any flower is that it has proven itself such a thing of beauty, such a measure of satisfaction, such an aid to the amateur that it is seen in every garden.

The origin of the word "iris" is most interesting: It comes from an old Greek word meaning rainbow. So it is that when we deal with the iris we are dealing with the colors of the rainbow.

The popularity of the iris rests on the fact that it is one of our most adaptable plants. In certain places and under certain conditions, it will grow at its best, but under the most adverse conditions it will grow well and bloom satisfactorily. For the best results, for the finest, greenest foliage and the most magnificent blooms, irises like three things:

First, they like a sunny location. They will stand almost any amount of sun, even perfect baking will not prove a calamity to the German iris; however they prefer a well-drained location, yet it is not unusual to see them used as border plants for a lily pond and to grow there well, too. They prefer a limestone soil, yet will grow well in almost sour soil.

German or Garden Iris

The best fertilizer for them is bone meal. This is particularly beneficial because of the lime that is always in bone meal. Some concentrated commercial fertilizer worked around the roots just before they are about to bloom will also be beneficial.

WHEN TO PLANT.

The German iris may be transplanted at any time, except when they are in full bloom. The best time for planting is immediately after they have finished blooming.

Most of the authorities suggest June, July and August plantings. The Iris Garden Club is planning on planting throughout the summer and fall in their garden.

In planting iris there is one thought that should be before you. The top of the rhizome is left out of the ground. Work the bone meal into the soil before the root is placed in the ground and pack the soil tightly about the root. One of the best methods of packing the soil is by watering thoroughly. This washes the soil around the fine roots and does away with the possibility of there being left any air pockets.

Because of the rapid multiplication, the iris should not be planted too closely to each other. For this same reason the most expensive roots, that cost two or three dollars each, are rather inexpensive the second year. It is not unusual to have eight or ten rhizomes the second year from planting the original one root. Because of this prolificacy these plants should be thinned out at least once each three years.

VARIETIES.

There are hundreds of varieties of German Iris, and in all probability there are at least 200 of these that are distinctly different and worth while. With that bit of apology and explanation we would like to suggest a few of the better known varieties that offer quite a range of color. For a white iris, with only a bluish cast, there is Florentina Alba also Madame Chereau, which is a white with blue borders. For the deep purples, there are several worth while varieties. Lent A. Williamson is rated 88 by the American Iris Society and is truly a magnificent purple iris. Purple king, crimson king and black prince are all three good purple irises. For the yellow shades there are the Inca Darius and Dr. Bernice. The pink effects may be gained by the use of Queen of May and Her Majesty. All of the intervening colors may be gained by the planting of some of the other varieties.

For the most striking effects with irises, they are planted in groups of clumps and will fit in particularly well with shrubs or at the base of trees as well as in the perennial border or in the more formal flower garden. The iris is growing in popularity as a cut flower as well as a garden flower.

The bulbous iris, that is the Spanish, Dutch and Filifora should all be planted in the fall at the same time that the other fall bulbs such as tulips and daffodils are planted. These are very beautiful little fellows and we will tell you more about them, that is if they are strangers to you, during the early fall just before planting time. The Japanese iris are also planted during the fall and we will hear more about them before a couple of moons have past.

DISEASES.

The iris is troubled with very few diseases or insects. Sometimes they become infested with root borer. This borer tunnels through the roots and will sometimes ruin an entire bed if it is not checked. The injured stock should be removed as soon as the trouble is found and it is well to burr over the iris bed the following winter in order to destroy the eggs.

On rare occasions they are bothered by leaf spot. Spraying with copper lime dust will control this disease. If the rhizome is planted too deeply, soft rot will set in. If this happens, it is best to soak the roots in a normal solution of semesan for about ten minutes and replant them immediately. Be sure not to plant them too deeply the second time.

These diseases and insects are very rare, which is unusual considering the number of pests and diseases that we must fight in order to have other flowers.

Everything considered, there is, in all probability, not another family of flowers that will add to our gardens as much of beauty with as little work as the German iris. As a matter of fact, about the only thing necessary, other than an occasional application of fertilizer, after planting is the division of the roots about once each three years.

BUGS.

The annual war is on in every garden. The bugs are beginning to attack our plants of all kinds. We are fortunate, at least, more fortunate than we have been at any time in the past since new things have been introduced with which we may battle our enemies. There are new insecticides that have been discovered since our last battle with them this past fall. There are new spray pumps, new dust guns that are more efficient than those we formerly used. We know more about the habits of the little gentlemen that we want to destroy. With each bit of information that we have been able to garner, with each bit of new insecticides, and with each improvement on our spray pumps, we are at a still greater advantage over our enemies. We may even refer to them as friends, now that we may destroy them so much easier than was the case in the past.

The use of pyrethrum as a base for sprays is being used more and more. Pyrethrum is not poisonous as so many of the other in-

WHAT TO DO IN JULY.

SPRAYING: The bugs are having a big time now. Those that chew may be controlled by any of the arsenical sprays such as arsenate of lead, calcium arsenate or pyrox. The lice, flies, aphids and other sucking insects may be controlled by the use of the pyrethrum sprays or nicotine sulphate. For the mildews, blights and black spot, the Massey Dust, Bordeaux or Volck; for bean beetles a mixture of calcium arsenate, sulphur and lime is recommended by the department of agriculture of Alabama.

FERTILIZER: If your dahlias and gladioli are about to bloom give them an application of a good high-grade complete commercial fertilizer. If they will not start blooming for a month or more use a mixture of sheep manure and bone meal. For the vegetable garden and the cutting flowers an application of a good high-grade commercial fertilizer, about 12-4-4 will make them grow off quickly.

LAWNS: For best results lawns should have a monthly application of a good high-grade fertilizer followed by a thorough soaking. Patch the bare spots with a few seeds and a handful of fertilizer in each spot.

SPRING BULBS: Tulip and daffodil bulbs may be taken up and transplanted at this time, now that the tops are turning yellow. These bulbs should be dried in a cool, shady, well-ventilated spot. This transplanting is not necessary.

PRUNING: Take out all of the dead wood in the shrubbery, fruit trees, roses and all plants. This is the proper time of the year for pruning all of the spring flowering shrubs, such as forsythia, spirea, weigela and bush honeysuckle, and all other shrubs blooming before the month of June.

WHAT TO PLANT IN JULY.

LAWNS: There is still time to plant Bermuda grass seed. Roll thoroughly after planting. Mow the lawn at least once each week.

FLOWER SEEDS: There is still time to get blossoms from annuals that flower quickly, such as zinnias, marigolds and petunias. Perennial flower seeds may now be planted for blossoms next year. The more popular perennials are hollyhocks, delphiniums, pansies, aquilegia, Canterbury bells, shasta daisy, English daisy foxglove, oriental poppies, etc.

VEGETABLE SEEDS: July is the accepted month for rutabagas, pumpkins, spinach, squash and crowder peas.

VEGETABLE PLANTS: Sweet potato slips, tomato, egg plant, pepper, cabbage, collards may all be set out now for fall use.

FLOWERING BULBS: Gladioli, tuberoses and cannas may all be planted until July 15th.

WATER PLANTS: Water lilies, water hyacinths and other water plants, such as Egyptian and American lotus may be started in July. If insects eat the lily pads use evergreen, which is not a poison and will not injure the fish.

MELONS: All of the vine crops, squash, watermelon, pumpkins and cantaloupes may still be planted.

BEDDING PLANTS: These may all be planted through June and the early part of July.

Police officers gave their evidence, Vincent Carney testified, also Mickey Cahill, one of the passengers in the gray sedan. Then Prosecutor Cuff read Moran's signed confession, detailing exactly how he had shot down the two patrolmen. Moran snapped out of his lethargy while the confession was being read. He looked around proudly, as though expecting approval for his cowardly attack.

All this evidence by the state was, of course, purely routine stuff, for the defense could not dispute the fact that Moran had killed the officers. The whole case for the defense rested upon the insanity evidence.

Attorney Smith first called Mrs. Margaret Moran, the prisoner's mother. She could not help much except to say that Thomas had changed considerably after he quit school. He had been very cruel to his sisters and brothers, all younger than he; nobody had been able to do anything with him.

The defendant showed no interest in this testimony. He appeared bored to death. His heavy, stolid features contrasted sharply with his mother's wan, delicate, anxious face.

Other defense witnesses included his sister, Mrs. Margaret McKenna, guards from Raymond street jail, where Moran had been confined, and various insanity experts.

Mrs. McKenna said her brother had been troubled with headaches three times a week. She told of his fondness for terrifying the other children, usually with a knife. Yes, she thought he was insane. He had never behaved quite like other children.

Attorney Smith requested Moran to take the stand at the opening of court, January 27, but he sat in his chair, silent and motionless. "Don't you wish to testify?" persisted Smith. Still no answer. Then Judge Martin asked him if he wished to take the stand—he looked at the floor. Two court attendants shook him by the shoulders. He looked at them, a shadow of a grin on his face, but kept his seat.

Insanity?
Dr. John A. McComber, neurologist, said Moran was suffering from a progressive form of insanity. "He has an exalted opinion of his own importance," said the doctor. "His sole object of living is to get a kick out of life."

RED MORAN BEHAVES SOMEWHAT ERRATICALLY.

Dr. Lewis J. Smith, neuropsychiatrist, who had been physician at the Matteawan hospital for the criminal insane for 11 years, stated that at the time of the shooting Moran had been suffering from an "epileptic furor." Other physicians testified that Moran was an epileptic.

While one of these witnesses was on the stand, the defendant kept drumming with a pencil on the table before him. An attendant ordered him to stop. Moran paid no attention, so the guard took it away from him. Another time when the judge entered the courtroom after a recess, Red was the only one to remain seated. A guard seized him by the shoulders and jerked him to his feet.

He again emerged from his habitual state (whether simulated or not, one can't say) of semi-coma when his girl friend, Agnes Guilfoyle, took the witness stand. That was on the 28th. She was a rebuttal witness for the state.

Miss Guilfoyle, a vivacious, red-haired child of 16, said that Moran had picked her up in a movie theater five months before.

"I saw him often after that," she said, "and he was always too lovely for words. On the Sunday before the two policemen were killed he called at my home and asked me to go for an automobile ride to Coney Island. With him were Lacurto and Cahill."

"Tommy drove the car to Coney Island and he went terribly fast. He only laughed when I asked him to slow up. We had some narrow escapes."

She testified that on the way back Lacurto took the wheel, while she sat in the rear with Tommy. She had told them, she said, that she would not get into the car if Moran drove any more she was that terrified.

"All at once while we were talking, he took a little white mouse out of his coat pocket," she continued. "I screamed terribly and he laughed and said the mouse was trained and it ran up and down the sleeve of his coat until he put it back in his pocket."

She said that he then asked her to elope with him.

"And you agreed?" asked Cuff.
"Yes. He told me to get ready to leave home and he would call for me in a few days. I did not see him again. The next I heard he was under arrest."

Miss Guilfoyle was not cross-examined. Her testimony didn't seem to mean very much.

Prosecutor Cuff again read some portions of the confession. When he reached the description of the killing, the prisoner grinned and went through the motions of pulling a trigger.

The case went to the jury on January 31. "Moran's crime was a horrible one," said Smith in his address to the jury. "Society is better rid of him—sure. He is a menace. But I contend, gentlemen of the jury, that he was not aware of the nature and quality of his acts."

Judge Martin told the jury that the evidence admitted of no verdict save either an acquittal or a conviction of murder in the first degree. He stated that there could be no middle ground. This was to prove very expensive advice.

The jury thought the matter over for 37 minutes and found Moran guilty of murder in the first degree.

He showed no emotion when the verdict was announced. When he was taken before the bar to give his pedigree he refused to answer the usual questions. More foolishness. The court knew how old he was and where he was born and who his parents were, didn't they? He was sick and tired of all this red tape. Let them burn 'em—what d'he'd did he care!

Two women wandered silently out into the street. His mother and his grandmother. Mrs. Moran did not weep, but suddenly she stumbled and would have dropped to the sidewalk had some one not gone to her and held her up. A passer-by hailed a taxi, helped them in, and gave the driver a bill.

AND SO THE MONTHS DRIFTED ALONG.

So Red went into the death house at Sing Sing.

He was still there the following July 20 when the Court of Appeals reversed the verdict on the ground that Judge Martin erred in limiting the jury to only two verdicts.

Nine days later Moran was back in Brooklyn, awaiting trial.

July passed—August—September—October—November—December—January—February—

In February, 1928, he was stabbed three times by William Reid, a fellow prisoner serving a 30-day sentence for disorderly conduct. The weapon was a sharpened spoon. Moran had been a trifle too nasty for Reid. Red was rather badly cut up, but he survived.

March—

The second trial began March 13 before County Judge Alonzo McLaughlin. It was exactly like the first trial, so far as the evidence was concerned. It went to the jury March 20 and after two hours and twenty minutes the verdict was again guilty of murder in the first degree.

"I got the works this time," said Red.

April—May—June—July—August—September—October—November—December—

On December 14, at 1 a. m., Moran entered the execution chamber at Sing Sing, smoking a cigarette. He walked straight to the electric chair and sat down. He did not speak or look around. Executioner Robert Elliot turned the switch at 1:02.

And so another meglomaniac experienced his last thrill.

of course, we haven't been actually engaged."

"Well, you can be engaged now," she said with a touch of asperity. "I will get the divorce, if you like, David. Although it's absurd because I have no particular charge. Suppose we say that I will, and finish with it right here. There's no necessity of going on and on this way. Mind if I say good-night?"

Before his disturbed silence, the curious emotion of his look, she fled upstairs. Charlotte could see him out. She found herself wanting to throw herself across her bed and cry and cry. But when she lay there she had not tears, only a sort of blank discouragement.

It was late, she realized after a while, but she couldn't possibly sleep. She loosened her hair and put on her negligee to walk out into the soft salt wind of the upper gallery, cooling her hot face.

Archer Collins' long yellow roadster slid up to the curb below with a little shuffling of brakes. She stopped in the shadows to look down at it. Archer was not driving it, but a girl, half lying negligently behind the wheel, a girl in a scant scarlet evening dress with bare shoulders and a smooth, insolent head, a girl even in the half light with an air that was conquering and unescapable. It was Peter in the seat beside her. Peter Benson, with his black head bare and very near that other one, and a white sleeved arm carelessly around the other's shoulders.

As the car throbbed a little under the street light, Caroline heard Peter laughing—young, careless laughter, caressing, and a little excited. He was looking down at Eleanor Loring's assured little smile as if he had never looked at a woman before in his life. He had one hand on the door as if he were expecting to get out, but Eleanor glanced up at the house and Caroline heard her slow voice, "He's gone, I fancy," she said negligently. "Let's drive." Then the car roared and slid down the street again, and Caroline saw Peter tighten that careless arm. Caroline asked herself curiously, staring after them, if this were pain she felt.

Then she saw that David had been standing across the street in the dark shadow of the dilly tree. Only a vague bulk but he was unmistakably David. He must have seen them as clearly as she had. He moved, after a moment, uncertainly to the corner. His gray hair was blown. She could see in the light the heavy lines deepening in his face. Those wretched children, she thought suddenly, and leaned over the railing.

"David," she called clearly and firmly. "David. Come back. I want to talk to you."

He started, and stared up toward her as if it had become incredible to him that any one could know him or care to speak to him in this strange and shadowy city.

"Come to the front door," she said again, and turned to go in. She almost ran, lightly, down the long stairs, and as she went she felt surging in her a great warmth of purpose and decision, of clarity and tranquillity. That was her own husband down there—unhappy and utterly at a loss, poisoning uncertainly on the strange street corner, as uncertainly as he was in his life, in his whole career. A shaft of pure anger at Eleanor Loring struck through her as she fumbled with the bolts. The very idea of a rude little snip like that humbling David Durant.

He was standing on the top step as she swung the door wide, fumbling with his hat. She could not bear to see him fumbling with his hat.

"You come in here, David," she said, "You'd better come in here and stay. I have a lovely cool room for you. And tomorrow you can be quite by yourself, to start to work. You'll like this house to work in."

She heard him sigh deeply as he stumbled across the threshold. He breathed heavily beside her in the dark as she shot the bolt home.

"That is," she said softly, keeping very still, "if you want to?"

"I've—been lost without it," he said slowly. "There wasn't any place—"

"You've been lost without me," she said, patting his sleeve and laughing a little with a kind of bright sagacity. Her heart was slow and tranquil. She didn't mind being David's age at all. It was so much easier. It was not romance at all. But it was very comfortable.

He put a heavy arm around her. "There was an idea I had," he said, "but somehow I couldn't. Look! Don't let me ever go on yachting trips again, will you?"

She laughed again, lightly, thrilled a little with something very like triumph, and with the touch of his lips on her hair.

secticides are. There is no danger that the baby, the dog, or the cat might try it as a new sort of breakfast food. Another big advantage in the use of pyrethrum sprays is the fact that it may be used for either sucking or chewing insects.

All of the insects may be divided into two classes. The sucking insects, those insects that suck the sap from the plant including the aphids and lice that are so common. Sometimes lice may be seen on the bottom of a nasturtium leaf so thick that the leaf seems black. These sucking insects may be killed by the use of nicotine in some shape, usually as a sulphate or by the use of one of the pyrethrum sprays. Care should be taken on using a liquid spray that the liquid be placed on the under side of the leaf. It is on the under side of the leaf that the sucking insects seem to prefer to hide. Place some sort of an attachment on the end of your spray pump that this spray may be directed to the under side of the leaf.

The chewing insects leave a wide trail behind them and they are usually detected only a short time after they have put in their appearance. These insects may be killed by the use of the pyrethrum sprays, or by the use of some one of the arsenical poisons. These arsenical poisons may be applied either in the shape of a dust or as a liquid spray. If the dusting method is used, it is best to apply the dust early in the morning in order that it will stick on the plants. If applied in the form of a liquid it may be applied at any time of the day.

"OW watch me closely," says Ira Mellish. "Golf's a game that's got to be played just so. If your hands and your feet are a fraction out of line or your—"

"Does it make any difference how your hair's combed," I cuts in, "or the kind of fillings you have in your wisdom teeth?"

"I take my stance thus," goes on Ira, with a scowl, "pull back like this, and—zowie!" The ball's topped and barely rolls off the tee.

"I know what's the matter with your game," offers Joe Davis. "You stand too near the ball after you hit it."

"What do you know about it?" growls Mellish. "Ever play golf?"

"Once," returns Davis. "When I was a lad, my father took me to the Miasma Golf and Hunt Club over near Hackensack for a round. I remember it as if it was tomorrow. Assuming a position of nonchalant ease at the first tee, I lets drive. The ball goes straight down the fairway and would've made the green, except for a string of freight cars that got in the way—"

"Where was this course?" I asks, shrewdly. "In a Jersey Central roundhouse?"

"No," says Joe. "It was out in the open. In the winter it was used for a fish-hatchery and in the summer it was rented out for circuses. But to get on with the game. My second shot slices into a cranberry bog, but I makes a good recovery to within 25 feet of the pin. My mashie approach, however, is not so good. The ball hooks into a bevy of beehives that had been parked in the neighborhood, bounds off an abandoned boiler, and strikes a society girl who was doing tat-work on the rim of the green. That's enough for me. That afternoon I leaves for parts unknown and nothing has been heard of me since."

"Would it were so," grunts Mellish. "Do you fellows want to learn the game, or don't you?"

"Apparently not," says I courteously. "We're taking lessons from you, but do your stuff."

After three or four tries, Ira manages to get the ball off the plate. Then he turns the driver over to me.

"What's the idea?" I asks. "To hit that flag down there?"

"Yeh," says Mellish, "but you'd better pull your drive. It's only four hundred and eighty-six yards, and you might overshoot it."

At that, I gets the ball further down the fairway than Ira did—about a hundred and fifty yards I should say.

"What do I do now?" I inquires. "Putt?"

"It's not necessary," replies Mellish, wearily. "I'll concede it. Here—let me show you how to make an iron shot."

Ira misses a couple and then digs up a divot big enough to subdivide into building lots.

"If I were you," suggests Davis, "I'd present that plot to the city for a park."

"I knew a lad once," I recalls, "who gave his gal a necklace of square-cut divots. I think one'd look swell around Minnie's neck."

"Say," howls Mellish. "How do you think a mashie iron'd look wrapped around your brow?"

"Talking about wrapping irons around brows," says I, "did you ever hear the story of the guy who accidentally killed his missus while swinging a niblick in a sand-trap? Stop me, if you've heard it."

"Consider yourself stopped," snorts Ira, "and I've never heard it."

"This bozo," I goes on, "comes running to the club-house all atremble and ready to collapse. 'I just killed my wife in a sand-trap,' he gasps to some members in good standing. 'What with?' asks one of the M. I. G. S. 'A niblick,' says the assassin. 'Well,' comes back the M. I. G. S., 'what are you worrying about? That's the right club to use in a trap.'"

This talk about traps is infectious. On his very next shot Mellish slaps one into a sand-hole—a real snappy sand-hole it is, too, with an overhanging lip.

"I did that on purpose," he explains, "just to show you boys how we adepts get out of trouble."

The adept's not so adept this time. He bangs away at the ball with no other result than to impede it deeper into the sand and so close to the bank that even Walter Hagan would have given it up and gone to the north of Scotland for the grouse-shooting. Joe and I just sit around making appropriate comments on the excavation work.

"Do we cut in," inquires Davis, "if you should strike a rich vein of antimony?"

"I hear," says I, "that it gets quite hot after you get down three or two hundred feet. Do you find it so, Ira?"

"You want to be careful when you come up," advises Joe. "I understand you get a kind of disease called the 'bends' when you jump from one level of pressure to another."

"Come on," I growls impatiently. "Throw it out. You'll be late for the fancy dress ball next month."

"I won't throw it out," barks Mellish. "That ball's going to get out of here by club-power if I break a Chinaman's head before I stop digging."

"Oh, very well," I shrugs. "You'll be legally dead at the end of seven years."

"You'll be legally dead at the end of seven minutes," yelps Ira, "if you don't shut your trap. Watch it come out now."

And it does. Mellish manages to get under the ball for the proper lift. It sails high above the green—and into a trap on the other side!

"Well," says Ira, picking up the pill, "it's no use shooting out of this one. You've got the idea, haven't you?"

"Yeh," comes back Joe, "I got it. To play this game right, you ought to carry a steam-shovel and apparatus for sinking caissons in your bag."

Ira does pretty well on the next hole, taking a five for a four par hole through sinking a twenty-foot putt. He's all hopped up about it.

"How do you like my game, caddy," he asks the kid.

"It's all right, I guess," says the kid, "but personally I prefer golf."

The third hole is the shortest on the course—a hundred and thirty yards.

"If you take more than one stroke on this one," I remarks, "you ought to go to a chiropodist and have your eyes examined. I could throw it into the cup from here."

"Yeh?" sneers Mellish. "A dollar'll get you a thousand if you sink it in one."

"You're on," says I, promptly. "With those odds, I'll bet you that a guy can marry his own widow. Hand me a club."

Ira slips me an iron and I takes a wallop at the pill. It's a wild hook to the left of the green and Mellish breaks into a sarcastic laugh, but he's laughing out of turn. The ball hits a big tree, bounces into a shallow trap, runs out of it to the pin, and plops in the hole!

Ira just stands staring at the green in wide-mouthed wonder. It's a minute or more before he comes out of the coma.

"Five thousand to one," he snarls, "that you can't do it again."

"Not me, baby," says I. "I'm through with golf until somebody beats my mark on this hole."

(There will doubtless be considerable argument by pro and con regarding the attitude toward the stymie and ornamental shrubbery expressed in this article, but no less an authority than Bobby Jones declares there is much to be said on neither side of the question. With that we rest our case, first removing a bottle or two for immediate consumption. Our next effort in the matter of American recreations will deal with Tennis. You can't afford not to miss it.)

OH, THAT'S DIFFERENT.

Henry Peck didn't often get out by himself at night—his wife saw to that. But there are times in the affairs of men when the tide is taken at its flood, etc.—this was such a night. Mrs. Peck was called away suddenly to her mother's and Henry, feeling like the little drummer boy in the "spirit of '76" episode, took a stroll in the bright light section of the city. Out of curiosity he dropped into a big hall where he heard a woman orator screeching at the top of her voice.

"Now," asked the woman, "is there any man in the audience who would let his wife be slandered and say nothing? If so, stand up."

Meek little Henry stood up.

The lecturer glared at him. "Do you mean to say you would let your wife be slandered and say nothing?" she cried.

"Oh, I—er—ah, I'm sorry," Henry apologized, grinning. "I thought you said 'slaughtered.'"

THE SECOND WARNING

Jeckerson and I stood staring at the lighted window of the hotel, in which stood the parrot's cage. It was the screaming of the bird that had caused us to pause on our way to our cots in the cottage—we turned and looked back, both of us quite startled at the sudden screen of the bird. But even as we watched, the light went out. Now the hotel was in absolute darkness. Not a light showed anywhere—unless, of course, you would call the glow from the fireplace in the living room a light.

"Come on, Hawkins," said Jeckerson, starting to walk back to the hotel which we had just quitted. "No sleep for us yet a while. We've got to work fast on this case or we will be beaten. By the great Jove! there is more to this mystery than I imagined."

"You don't expect to find the answer in there, do you?" I exclaimed, as he led me to the hotel.

"Not the final answer, no!" he said, as he quickly leaped up the step, pulling me with him. "But several other answers have got to come forth from this point before we go farther. Hold on—is the old man still moving, or has he gone to bed? By Jove! what a ghostly place it is in there, with only that firelight from the hearth!"

"Yes, he's still up, Jeckerson!" I whispered, suddenly. "I see some one moving—over by the clock!"

We pressed our noses against the pane of glass in the door and watched. A shadow of a man was moving along the wall to the right of the fireplace. At the corner where the low stairway began stood a great grandfather's clock. The light from the fireplace was so dim that we could not really make out whether or not it was the owner of the place, whom we had bid good night a few minutes ago. We saw him stop in front of the clock and pull up the weights which wound it. Jeckerson grasped the doorknob and turned it—

"Who's there?" cried the man within, turning suddenly, his voice alive with fear. I could see his hands shaking—

"Open, Mr. Parr!" whispered Jeckerson. "We've got to talk to you again for a minute—"

"Oh, yes, all right, then!" exclaimed the man, hurrying forward, and turning the key in the lock. "Thank God it's you, Mr. Jeckerson! You had me badly frightened, sir! I had just locked up the place and was preparing to turn in for the night. You see, any noise has a disturbing effect these last few days, sir—ever since the terror of the lake has bobbed up again."

"Quiet, please," whispered Jeckerson, as we stepped inside, and closed the door. I turned to watch Jeckerson, and saw him lock the door, taking out the key and slipping it into his pocket. "We must go very cautiously, Mr. Parr, if we are to be of any real help to you. Talk in low tones, you understand? Now, if you will kindly be seated, I want to ask you a few more questions."

"Sure!" exclaimed our host, in an awed whisper. "Come, sit by the fire. I'll throw on another log—"

"No!" interjected the detective, quickly. "That would give more light—we want to remain here, in this darkened room, Mr. Parr, and I want everything to appear as if everybody has gone to bed. Not a sign of life anywhere. Do you get me?"

Our host looked amazed.

"You do—you really believe, then—that—"

"Mr. Parr, we left you a few minutes ago, intent to seek our beds in the cottage which you have so kindly set aside for me and Doctor Waters and the boys we have brought up to Lake Tapaho with us. We have changed our minds, suddenly, and I do not think we will have any sleep for another few hours, at least."

Our host sank slowly into a seat.

"You—you saw something, then?"

"Two things, Mr. Parr. One of them we would not have seen if we had not heard a sound. What do you know about this woman who came here tonight with a parrot in a cage?"

"I never saw her before in all my lifetime, sir. Surely, she has nothing to do with the mystery on this lake?"

"I'm not so sure about that, Mr. Parr. There is another thing. Just as we left this room a few minutes ago, we walked along the lake shore toward our cottage. I fully expected to get a good night's sleep, and I wanted Seckatary Hawkins to get a good rest himself, so as to be ready and fit for a full day tomorrow. As you may suppose, Mr. Parr, we expect to find out a great deal tomorrow, to help us in solving this mystery for you—"

"You cannot solve it too soon, sir?" I exclaimed to our host.

"So I thought. Well, just as Hawkins and I passed along the lake shore, something seemed to drift away from us, like a great gray shape it floated out into the fog upon the lake."

"What was it, sir?"

"That's what brought me back here—"

—to ask you whether you knew. Has there ever been seen such a thing?" "No, no, sir! Nothing of that description, sir! I am appalled, sir! Something new to terrify us—"

"This need not really terrify you, Mr. Parr. It may have a very simple explanation, if we only knew. Then again, it may bear a frightful train of consequences. I'm ready to admit that it frightened me. Its very appearance, you understand, all of a sudden, as it were, and the silent way it sped away from us as we approach—" his cigar—but suddenly he withdrew his hand and said: "Listen!"

Thump! Thump! Thump! Three thunderous thumps came from above our heads, before Jeckerson had time to utter the words that were on his lips, the thumping moved swiftly toward the wall, and then, the next moment came the sound of a door opening on the landing of the stairway above us, and a reddish glow of light streamed down the stairs.

"It's the light at the head of the walker—we've had the doctor in about it, but he says the best thing is to let Cabbett alone. The lake calls 'im, sir! You see, Cabbett is not strong. I feel sorry for him, sir, and so I let him stay. I know nobody else would have him—he'd most likely starve if I didn't let him keep his job here, sir. And he's good as a porter, sir—and very cheap. If the doctor would have ordered anything—but no, the doctor said to let Cabbett alone, as it was not dangerous for him to walk in his sleep, because Cabbett always comes back in a little while, none the worse—he's not a dangerous type of sleep-walker, sir—"

"Who was the doctor that told you this?" interrupted Jeckerson.

"Doctor Chambless, sir—"

"I should like to meet him, at your convenience, Mr. Parr."

"Tomorrow, sir, if you like. He is one fine doctor. He's been stationed here for many years, sir. In fact, he has been the doctor for this lake fear anything now; let us have light!"

A log fell upon the embers. Our host was stirring the glowing ashes. A flame sprang up. It lit up a little bit of a parcel, done up in newspaper, lying upon the rug, right beneath our gaze. Jeckerson picked it up gingerly. A small piece of twine was wrapped about it. He pulled it off. A stone was within the wrapper, and under the stone a small bit of blue note paper. Jeckerson dropped stone, twine and newspaper wrapping, and holding the bit of blue paper to the light, he read out loud:

"This is the second warning. The next will not come in writing. Get off the lake before it arrives, else may God help you!"

Jeckerson looked up slowly, after he had read it. He passed his gaze from Mr. Parr to me before he spoke.

"The second warning," he said, slowly, with a grave face. "You understand, Mr. Parr, that these people, whoever they may be, are aware that you have sent for me to solve this mystery. They fear that I may be successful. You understand what I mean, don't you? If there is anything you have been keeping from me, for any reason at all, I advise you to tell it to me before it is too late—both for you and for me."

"Ah, Mr. Jeckerson! That you should suspect me of that!" cried Mr. Parr. "God knows I am sore beset, sir! I am the one who suffers most. This plague of a ghost upon this lake has driven me frantic, sir. Surely you would not believe that I would hide anything from you, sir!"

Jeckerson took up the newspaper wrapper that had come around the stone which brought us the second warning. He stooped and lighted it from the glowing embers under the newly lighted log. Slowly he applied it to his long cigar.

"Well," he said slowly, "it seems to me that you are too easy-going, Mr. Parr. About that doctor, now—the one you were telling us about just before this second warning came—Chambless, I believe you said his name was—"

"That is right, sir!"

"Well, now about this sleep-walker. You will recall that just before this second warning was thrown through the window, your strange-looking Cabbett walked out of this room, apparently in his sleep—"

"Hush! here he comes, Jeckerson," I said, sharply, under my breath.

And there was a movement on the knob of the door. The next second the door was pushed open, and Cabbett came back in. He seemed still in a stupor. He moved slowly while he closed the door, turned the key in the lock, and then went to the stairs. But as soon as his feet touched the bottom step, he scampered up seemingly on all fours, quickly, disappearing at the same time that we heard the door slam above us, and the reddish glow of the night lamp went out.

Jeckerson turned to stare at the innkeeper.

"That," he said, slowly, "ends Cabbett's work for the night."

"You don't mean, sir," began Mr. Parr, in a quivering voice.

"I mean you can't trust anybody around here, sir!" snapped Jeckerson. "That Cabbett is a very suspicious character to me. What could have prevented him from going out there and playing the part of the fellow who threw us this second warning—"

"Jeckerson!" I screamed. "There it is again! Jeckerson!"

I stood up—pointing with my finger toward the window—and for a moment again loomed up that great, black, glossy shadow that I had seen just before the second warning had been tossed in. Jeckerson leaped up at my cry—sprang to the window—saw what I saw, and with a muttered oath he ran to the door, turned the key, pulled open the door, sprang upon the verandah—

I was at his heels. I was upon the verandah at the same time he was. But neither of us saw a thing. Only the lake shore spreading away before us, and the fog was lifting.

"Tomorrow we will look into this further," said Jeckerson.

Which we did.

SECKATARY HAWKINS

We saw a great, dark, glossy sape behind those foggy window panes!

ed. Ghostly, if you know what I mean."

"I do, sir!" whispered our host. "And at this hour, sir! Good heavens! After 9 o'clock at night, and when all the lights are put out, I begin to shake—"

"Shaking won't get you anywhere!" snapped Jeckerson. "Look here, Mr. Parr! I feel sorry for you, really. You are surrounded by a thousand terrors in the night. What it all means I can not guess, for I have not had time to figure it out, not being here long enough, but if you will promise to do everything I tell you to do, listen to me, Mr. Parr, I'll see you safely through this mysterious business—"

"Oh, I'll do anything you say! I want to get rid of this terror! Look! how I shake! Every night after 9 o'clock I feel this nervous! I can't even think straight! I'm not myself—now—you see! At this hour—" he paused and turned his head, to glance furtively behind him—"at this hour I'm positively numb! I've all I can do to wind the clock and rush up to bed, and lock my door. Almost like a schoolboy, sir, afraid of the dark!"

"I can sympathize with you, sir," said Jeckerson, nodding with a smile. "I don't blame you one bit! By the great Jove! If I were in your place, sir, I'd shiver and shake, and shake and shiver. But you can depend upon me, sir. And, should I fail you, there is that young man there, sir, Seckatary Hawkins—and he's the boy who won't let one thing get past his ever-watchful eye and his quick reasoning—"

"Don't count on me!" I cut in, suddenly, and I held up my hand. "Look, I'm shaking myself from hearing all this talk! If there's spooks roaming 'round here tonight—I'm goin' to be fair an' square with you—I'm telling you now that the first spook I see—well, I'm going to run!"

Silence followed my words—for a few moments none of us spoke. Then, slowly, Jeckerson began to speak:

"Spooks are out tonight, Hawkins," he said, slowly as he reached for a glowing amber with which to light stair, sir!" whispered our host. "The night lamp, sir—"

He got no further, for something was coming down the stairway. Something that bumped and clumped its way down, one slow foot and another—and in the reddish glow that emanated from the stairhead we saw a strange figure—the odd figure of Cabbett, the man-of-all-work—coming slowly down the stair, one hand on the rail, the other clawing the air for something that was not there. In the deep glow of the light his figure was frightful, bent over as he was, his eyes popping out of their sockets, staring straight ahead of him, his ghastly-drawn lips moving in words that never came—

"Hush!" whispered our host. "It is Cabbett! He is sleep-walking, sir! Often he dreams like this! He knows not what he is doing. But do not awaken him, sir! It is dangerous!"

Jeckerson got up silently. Swiftly he moved to the door and inserted the key, and then ran back to his place in the big chair by the low-burning fire.

The grotesque shadow thrown by the bent-over Cabbett now passed from the stairs—he was on his way towards the door, staring straight in front of him. He did not seem to see us. He never looked toward the fire, in front of which we sat. He clumped along the floor, dragging one foot after another until he reached the door. He turned the key, pulled on the knob, still staring straight in front of him, and passed out, drawing the door securely behind him.

"Well," said Jeckerson, in a low tone, "that habit of Cabbett's seems to be well known to you, eh, Mr. Parr?"

"Ever since we've had him, sir," answered our host. "He's a sleep-shore ever since we came here and made this a summer cottage resort, sir."

"Indeed!" exclaimed Jeckerson. "That is very interesting. Doctor Chambless, you said his name was—"

"That's right, Mr. Jeckerson."

"I must meet him, then. Hold on! Quiet everybody! What was that?"

His last words were uttered in a hissing whisper. Something was out upon the porch—at the window—now the window was being jerked back and forth—we saw a great, dark, glossy shape behind those foggy window panes—a shape like a huge walrus that nearly froze the marrow in my bones—the next instant the window was torn open—I saw a great flipper like that of a seal—and something came bounding in upon the carpet—

"Wait! Watch it, Hawkins! Keep your eye on it, Hawkins!" Jeckerson yelled at me. But there was no use. I did what he told me, well enough.

But even though I sprang out of my chair and ran to the opened window, I saw nothing. No! The huge walrus shape was gone. Nothing was upon the porch. I scanned the whole vista that was laid before my eyes, but there was nothing but a long stretch of lake shore, shrouded by the fog.

"What is it?" demanded our host. And now his tone was more trembling than before. He bent above Jeckerson, as I turned back upon them. Jeckerson had stooped. He was upon his knees, now, staring at something that lay upon the floor, right on the carpet in front of the hearth. I stooped down on hands and knees. There was a small object lying there. I reached out to pick it up, but Jeckerson cried out:

"Don't touch it! Wait! Throw a log on the fire, innkeeper! Let us have more light here! No need to

Our Weekly Meeting

How often do you sit and dream of the days when you will realize your ambition—when you have accomplished that which in your mind would be the greatest possible and most desirable thing in your life? Those are day dreams, of course. And dreams are interesting things, whether we have them awake or asleep. Now, there are all sorts of dreams, and dreams have played an important part in some big events. The ancient kings used to place a great deal of importance on a dream, and there were wise men who were called upon to explain the meaning of dreams. The reason why I am writing this to you today is because our contest this week is going to be about a dream—any dream that you want to write about, of course; but don't you think that the best title would be "When My Dreams Come True?"

However, should you decide to send in a story about a dream, or a verse, it will be eligible for this contest if the title of piece you send in contains the word "DREAM." That makes it easier for all members to compete.

Having been asked of late to suggest some titles for members to choose from, I might mention that any of the following ought to give you a sufficient idea to begin: "My Dream," "A Dream that Came True," "In Dreamland," "Day Dreams," "A Funny Dream," "Twas Only a Dream," "The Dreamer."

We have this week a number of very interesting letters to place before the club. In starting the meeting we want to announce again that the members whose letters are presented in our regular meetings will receive an autographed copy of a book made up of Seckatary Hawkins' stories which have appeared in this paper. The first one we present is from Indiana:

Dear Seck:
Let's boost that motto, Fair and Square! Let's fly its banner in the air! And some day, some one will realize its meaning as they see it rise straight toward the clouds to float on high. But stay—let's save it or the sky as shine on us below! And every day our best we'll try to others its meaning show.

To others fair and square we'll be; We'll teach them right from wrong. And then they'll soon begin to see That life is one grand song.
Yours, fair and square, hoping to win a book.
A member.
WILLIAM STRUNK, Jr.,
Buckskin, Ind.

LOOK IN GEOGRAPHY FOR THIS ONE.

"Declaration of Independence" was the solution to last week's password, and it is gratifying to know how many boys and girls know their history.

Now, then, let's get back to our geographies again for this week's password and try to make it easy for every member of the club to figure out. Here it is:

CALIPHANAPA

No, sir, it does not mean Caliph Anapa, or any other Caliph of Bagdad—the way it stands now the letters in the word are all mixed up, but when you have changed them around and placed them in their right positions, you will have a word that means "of or pertaining to the mountain system of the eastern United States, extending from Quebec to Alabama."

Two little sisters in the Cotton State each write a letter, both on the same long sheet of note paper, so we introduce both of them:

Hello, Seck:
I read your club page every Sunday, and enjoy it very much. I notice you have a new member in your club. Wish I could hear that little fellow play.
I am a little girl 8 years old, have red hair, blue eyes and in the 4th grade. I am sending 2c for my club badge.
Good-bye!
Yours, fair and square,
DORIS SMITH,

Hello, Seck:
I can't let my little sister get ahead of me, so I'm sending a line, too. I enjoyed your trip to Cuba. I'll bet you did get homesick, though.
I am a little girl 11 years old and in the 7th grade. I, too, have red hair and blue eyes. I enjoy reading and writing lots. Am sending for my club badge. Hope to see mine and sister's letters in the paper.
Yours, fair and square,
MARGARET SMITH,
Stroud, Ala.

Down in dear old Georgia lives a member we introduce next, and there is something like a rhyme to this letter:

Dear Seck:
I am writing you again, Hoping a book to win. I'm writing you for the fourth time—Twice in letters, twice in rhyme. I read your adventures daily, And enjoy them gaily. I have read three of your books: Two of them for me were bought, But the third from my cousin I brought. I've read of the "Yellow Y" and their gang With their rat-faced leader who should be sentenced to hang. The adventures of the "Red Runners" and the adventures of "Ching Toy," And now I'm crazy for another of your books called "Stoner's Boy." Yours, fair and square,
JANITA FLYANT,
543 Chestnut St., Atlanta, Ga.

Now we take pleasure in introducing a member in the Far West—well, it's as far west as you can go without walking into the ocean:

Dear Seck:
I have written to you before, but I haven't won a book yet. I am hoping that I will find this letter under the "Weekly Meeting" column, but if I don't, I will keep on trying, as I know a quitter never wins and a winner never quits. I received my badge and membership card, and I think they are grand. I think your club colors are pretty, and I like your motto "Fair and Square" very much. I read your stories in the paper, and I like them very much. If your books are anything like your stories, they sure must be great. I will have to say good-bye until next week.
Yours, fair and square,
ELEANOR RUTH BOSWELL, 13,
643 Juanita Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.

While we are out here in the Far West, we might as well stop at Hollywood long enough to get acquainted with this member, who can write a dandy letter, and wants to hear from other girl members of the club:

Dear Seckatary Hawkins:
I'm a new candidate for membership in your delightful club. I'm sure it's delightful. Mother just subscribed for the paper last Monday, so yesterday was the first time I saw your club page, but I decided immediately to join if you'll have me. I love to write stories, though they never seem to amount to much; and poems, though they are harder; and your club is

Dear Seck:
I am enclosing my membership blank with this letter. I sure do like your stories every Sunday. I haven't even read one of your books, but I am sure they are very good because of the fine comments on them by other members. A friend of mine and I exchange books because both of us like to read. I would like to correspond with any members who are interested in mechanics and with others too. I will tune off now but I will be tuning on again soon.
Always, fair and square,
CHARLES PERRY,

Dear Seck:
I only get your paper on Sunday. Although I am a girl, I like to read boys' stories better than I do girls'. In January I will be 12 years old. I was promoted to Junior High school, seventh grade. My brother, Everett, has joined your club and he likes it very much. I have no pets. But I have a little brother that is two years old weighs 42 pounds, has red hair and blue eyes and is also very good looking. Blue and white are my favorite colors.
Yours, fair and square,

Dear Seck:
I received my club badge and I am very proud of it. My friends think it is very pretty.
I read your adventures every day and enjoy them very much. I just can't wait for the next paper to see what you and the other boys are going to do with that three-eyed thing. Gee! I believe I would have run.
I am a girl with blue eyes, blond hair, 4 feet 11 inches tall, and I am 17 years old. My birthday is April 15th. I wonder if I have a twin.
For extra, I have a little black dog and a cat.
I would be glad some of the other members would write to me.

Dear Seck:
I was 11 years old June 10th, and am in the seventh grade. I made A's in every subject, except writing and I'm going to try hard to have all A's in that next term. I read your adventures in the daily and Sunday paper and have ever since you organized your club. O! Gee! how I do enjoy them.

A GREAT ADVENTURE

"But it is a very dangerous thing to do, and I know you'll never come back alive."

"I know, sir, but the war is always filled with danger." Lieutenant Howell, of the United States Army Air Corps had assigned Jack Harley a dangerous trip over the enemy's lines to check upon the machine gun nests.

Just before Jack climbed into his double motored Fokker plane, Lieutenant Howell came to give his friend a farewell.

"Good-bye, and good luck," were his parting words.

Jack passed over the American lines into the German territory. He was studying the ground below and didn't hear the plane approaching from the rear, above the roar of his two motors.

But he did hear a sharp report and feel a pain in his left arm. He looked and his sleeve was soaked with blood.

When Jack returned to consciousness he found his wound bandaged but his head ached terribly. He was not bound but he knew that he was in the hands of the enemy. He looked around the room for his guards, but saw no one. With a painful effort he arose and walked silently to the door. Looking through a crack he saw two men engaged in a conversation in low tones, but not low enough that they could not be heard by the prisoner within.

"Tomorrow is the time for the left and middle wings to attack together, isn't it?"

"I guess so, and I believe that they're going to mop up."

"You go in and see if that skunk has come to yet, while I go and get a drink of water. The captain said to carry the measly spy to him as soon as he woke up."

Jack thought quickly and he climbed up over the door, and as the German passed beneath him he gave a leap and landed squarely on his shoulder, bearing him to the floor. One punch was enough to knock him senseless. Jack quickly exchanged clothes and pulling his hat over his eyes left the place before the other German came back. As he turned a corner he saw to his astonishment and joy a landing field. Lowing his face Jack approached the nearest plane. As he was climbing into the cockpit he motioned for a mechanic.

"Crank!" ordered Jack in a cold tone.

"But, sir, there's no one going up today."

"No matter, I told you to crank this plane."

The mechanic obeyed and as the plane flashed past he exclaimed, "spy!"

But it was too late, Jack was in the air heading for safety.

As Jack crossed the lines he was attacked by a squadron of American planes, but he signaled to surrender and reached the ground without being fired upon. Jack reported to Lieutenant Howell of the conversation that he overheard and he later received a letter of thanks and promotion to second lieutenant from the general.

Dear Seck:
How's the old river bank? "Gee," I wish I lived as close to a river as you do. I haven't won a book yet, I. This letter does not win a book I will try, try again. A humble bee stung me Saturday.
I have a pet cat. He catches a whole lot of rats.
I hope you have a good time at Lake Tarabo.
I will have to sign off now but, gee, I wish I could keep on writing.

JOE BRADLEY,
Buford, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I read your adventures every day in the paper, and enjoy them more than anything else. Our teacher read us one of your books. It was called "They Grey Ghost." We all enjoyed it.
Well, Seck, I will tell you something of myself. I am 11 years old, blue eyes, fair complexion, black hair, weigh 100 pounds, am 5 feet 2 inches tall. My favorite hobby is reading.
Yours, fair and square,
GRACE ODOM,
1046 Kirkwood Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I am a Georgia girl 11 years of age. Good old summertime is here again. I know it is fine down at the clubhouse near the river. I think if I could be there I would go in swimming nearly every day. I know all are glad, as well as myself, that school is out again. Our school had a picnic at Lifesay Springs the last day. We all had a wonderful time.

I read all your pieces, Seck. Your adventures make The Constitution that much better. When the paper comes, the first thing I read is your adventures. I can hardly wait until the next issue comes. I have books of Scouts adventures, but none of them are as interesting as the stories about you.

Wishing all a happy vacation.
Yours, fair and square,
FRANCES COFFEDGE, Zetella, Ga.

Dear Seck:
Hello everybody! This is my first letter, however, not my last.

I enjoy writing letters and everybody try me out and see if I don't like to answer them, too.

I suppose before I go any farther I had better tell you how I look. I have light brown hair, blue eyes and my skin is very tan, for I am in the Florida sun nearly all the time.

My favorite sport is swimming. I live just two miles from the ocean and I go nearly every day.

Yours, fair and square,
EMILY DICKEY,
209 S. E. 4th Ave., Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Dear Seck:
I am a boy 8 years of age. I am 4 feet and 4 inches high. I sure do enjoy reading your adventures in the paper. I have not written before. I like your colors, blue and white and your motto, "Fair and Square." I have no pets. I like to take up n-air trips.

Yours, fair and square,
LESTER ODOM,
1046 Kirkwood Ave., Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Seck:
Guess you are surprised to hear from me so quickly. Well, I was afraid my last letter wouldn't be in print so here I am writing again.

Seck, I believe I know who the ghost of the lake is. I believe it is Spike Givens. Don't you?

Seck, I sure do wish I could be with you and your club this summer, even if I am a girl. I am sure I would have a fine time with your club.

Seck, I sure hope you and Jeckerson will find a way to solve the mystery. I am almost sure you will.

Well, I'll tune off for this time, but look for me again.

Yours, fair and square,
MAYNE MERRILL,
Jakin, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I decided to write a you for a change. I live at East View Estate, which is in the country. I like it here because I can fish, swim and lots of things. I also have a horse which I love to ride. I go to school in the city every year. I know Mrs. Felton, she was an intimate friend of ours, and she surely was an interesting person. Guess you are wondering how I look, so I'll tell you. I am a blonde, I have blue eyes, chestnut brown hair, (naturally curly) fair skin and am slender. I like your club immensely, the mystery of Lake Tapaho is particularly exciting. Hope everyone decides to write me, so I'll stop and make room for others.

Yours, fair and square,
DOROTHY McDANIEL,
Rydal, Ga.

Dear Seck:
I received my club badge. I was so proud to get it that I said to every girl and boy friend, "Look at my Seckatary Hawkins pin."
Tell all of your members to write to me. I will answer every one I get. I always will remember your club motto, "Fair and Square." I like your club colors, too.

Yours, fair and square,
LOUISE RAMEY,
Tiger, Ga.

Removing Summer Stains

Summer Fruits and Cold Drinks Are Hard on One's Table Linen; Automobile Touring and Summer Sports Do Plenty of Damage to One's Wardrobe. Only Immediate Action on a Spot, With the Right Agent, Can Eliminate the Evidences of the Accident

By Bernice Bronner

MANY years ago—oh, twenty-five at least—we heard much of a place called "Spotless Town." The inhabitants of this mythical city kept their pots, pans, kettles, knives, forks, spoons, dishes, floors, the paint in their houses and even their hands and dispositions speckless.

It was easier to be a spotless family in those days than it is for us moderns. We wear delicate gay colored clothes the year round; from oldest to youngest we spend more time in the fresh air and pursue sports with conscientious zeal. Autos and planes dash us about, and in summer we inhabit the beaches and golf links in throngs. With all this increased activity and interest it is more difficult than ever to keep ourselves well groomed and our household appointments able to bear inspection at all times.

Especially in summer—the season of vacations, picnics and added entertaining—does the vigilant housewife wage constant warfare on spots and stains. A spotless family nowadays is a real achievement.

If you would join the spotless crusade be initiated into the watchwords. One is: Be quick. As soon as the iced coffee is spilled begin at least preliminary efforts to remove it, for if a stained tablecloth is allowed to lie untouched in the laundry basket several days the coffee may be firmly dried or you may have forgotten the cause of the disfiguring yellow spot.

Be gentle. It is not main strength, but light, careful strokes that prevent unsightly rings and leave the texture unharmed.

Be sparing. A few drops of a bleach or solvent are enough at a time. This avoids spreading the liquid into the surrounding material, which does not need it.

Above all be intelligent. Work in a good light. Be sure of the kind of material. Is it cotton, silk, or is it a mixture? Choose the method of treatment that will be safe. Always try the method you are about to use on a piece of goods, even if you must clip it from a seam or the end of a belt. After the stain is gone the battle is not won unless all trace of the reagent is gone, too, for it may rise up to plague you by causing a blemish worse than the one it removed.

Mildew

Most stains we regard as visitations of a hostile providence, but it is usually our own fault if we find the dark spots of mildew have come overnight to disfigure our linens and clothes. Mildew is a plant and, like other plants, needs warmth and moisture to thrive. Given these, a fabric to fasten itself to, a dark place and the rest is botany. The housewife who on a hot evening dampens clothes preparatory to ironing them in the morning may find when she unrolls them that another problem awaits her attention first. Therefore, to avoid mildew never store fabrics in a dark, damp or warm place.

In some climates mildew is inevitable. In Japan, for example, during the hot, rainy summers Americans equip their houses with "drying rooms," where oil stoves are kept burning continually.

If the mildew is fresh and on white cotton or linen laundering will remove it. Hang in the sun to dry. If some stain remains, sprinkle with salt, moisten with lemon juice and return to the sunshine. Add more lemon juice if necessary. Rinse. If the spot persists dilute Javelle water half and half with water and apply to the spots with a medicine dropper. Do not allow it to remain on the spots more than one minute before rinsing in warm soap solution or the bleach will attack the fabric. Repeat this treatment if necessary, but not more than five or six times or the material will be affected.

Where it is not convenient to wash out grass stained garment, or where stain appears on a non-washable material, use denatured alcohol, applied with brushing motion. Below, right, fruit-stained napkins or tablecloths should first be soaked in water to loosen the stain. Then fasten stained section tightly across bowl and pour hot water on it from a height of three or four feet. The force of water carries off remaining juice.

Rinse well with one tablespoon ammonia added to the last water. It is most important to rinse out all the Javelle water. If the mildewed article is large and of sturdy weave, such as a sheet or bath towel, soak five or six hours in a solution of one part of Javelle water to eight of plain water. Rinse thoroughly through several clear waters, to the last of which add one tablespoon of ammonia.

As Javelle water deteriorates with time it is best for the occasional user to buy it in small quantities.

Mildew on colored cottons and linens if not eradicated by laundering, may also be removed by potassium permanganate, although it should always be tried first on an unexposed portion of the goods to determine its effect on the dye. Dissolve one teaspoon of the crystals in one pint of water and apply a little of this to the stain with a medicine dropper and allow it to remain for about five minutes. Remove any resulting pink or brown stain by applying lemon juice and rinse thoroughly.

For mildew on white silk or wool try laundering first. If the spots persist you must again resort to a bleach, but not Javelle water, for it attacks silk and wool disastrously. Dissolve one-quarter teaspoon of potassium permanganate in one-half cup of water. Place the mildewed spot over a bowl of steaming hot water to hasten the action and fasten with a rubber band. Apply the permanganate solution with a medicine dropper and leave five minutes. The permanganate will leave a stain on which you must now drop a little oxalic acid solution (one tablespoon oxalic acid crystals dissolved in one cup of water) if the material is silk, or hydrogen peroxide if the material is wool. If, after rinsing, the mildew is still visible repeat the process. Finally rinse well.

Laundering, let us say again, is the first resource for removing mildew from colored silk or wool. The permanganate-oxalic acid treatment is a doubtful second because of its possible bleaching effect.

Water Spots

It is occasionally the lot of even the most weather-wise to be caught in a summer shower. Even if shelter is available a few drops from foliage and leaves leave spots in the most conspicuous places, on sleeves or shoulders. Water spots may be dealt with variously. First try the magic nickel. Select a clean nickel from your purse and, holding the material taut, draw the smooth, blunt edge of the coin firmly but gently back and forth over the spot in the direction of the weaves. If the spot was caused by the water drawing the threads temporarily out of position, as in a crepe weave, it will disappear. If, however, there is sizing in the material the water may have dissolved some of it and no amount of rubbing will restore the texture. In this case turn the garment inside out, sponge it evenly all over with a clean cloth wrung out of cool water and when nearly dry press with a moderate iron. Try to move the iron and cloth in the direction of the weave. The material is now one big water spot, with its luster restored by pressing. If the fabric is washable laundering will, of course, remove water spots and usually render proof against further trouble of the sort, although there are exceptions, as witness silk stockings.

Foliage

We may permit ourselves an abandon of delight as being out of doors—tramping, working in the garden and golfing—even though we are likely to collect green foliage stains. Grass, vines, flower stems, all contain a green coloring matter which is fortunately easily dealt with. A warm soap solution and persistent but gentle rubbing between the fingers will be quite sufficient to clear a foliage stain on a washable garment. Soap in solution should be used rather than the soap itself, for if a soap cake is rubbed directly on a fabric it is hard to rinse out, and when a garment with soap still in the fabric is ironed a grayish color—a stain in itself—is the distressing result.

After the washing there may still be a slight yellow stain from the grass showing on white garments. To remove this a mild bleach, such as hydrogen peroxide from the medicine closet, should be applied. A stronger bleach for white cotton or linen's Javelle water or potassium permanganate, to be used as described for mildew, and necessary for the dark brown stains caused by dandelions.

A green foliage stain on unwashable material can be sponged out with denatured alcohol. Place the stain upside down on a clean, folded cloth or blotter, so that the stain can be flushed out without having to pass through the material. Moisten a clean cloth in a small amount of alcohol and gently brush in the direction of the weave. Now move the stain to a dry place on the blotter and brush dry with a dry portion of the cloth. Repeat if necessary. To prevent a ring forming, brush the alcohol irregularly into the surrounding fabric as you work.

Mud

Changing a tire on a country road may be a simple matter in itself, but it is likely to leave traces to remind us. Many a bit of country mud has found its way to town on summer frocks, thus. Mud stains are simple to treat. Try brushing them carefully after they are dry. This will usually remove all trace. If not, proceed exactly the same as with grass stains.

Tar and Road Oil

If there is reason to believe that these mud stains contain tar or road oil, then they present a different problem. Lose no time, but sponge repeatedly and patiently with carbon tetra-chloride or with one of the many commercial cleaners of which it is a base. There are many of these preparations on the market which are faithful aids to the cleaner, and useful in emergency.

Lubricating Grease

Smears of lubricating grease from the automobile may worry you too, until you sponge them with your favorite cleaner or with carbon tetra-chloride, gasoline or naphtha. Sometimes it is possible to scrape or wipe much of the adhering grease from the spot before treating. It is also helpful to surround the stain with a ring of French chalk to prevent its spreading. If the stained garment is washable, an alternative is washing with warm water and soap containing naphtha or kerosene. For a difficult stain on washable fabric rub the spot gently between the fingers with cold lard. This will urge the black particles in the grease out of the fibers into the lard. Scrape off the lard and repeat if necessary. Finally wash in warm soap solution. If the garment is not washable, try an absorbent, such as blotting paper, French chalk, powdered magnesia, or white talcum powder for fine fabrics, corn meal or salt for carpets, rugs and other coarse materials. This is effective only on spots of grease or oil unmixed with particles of dirt or metal.
